Unless required by statute or contract, the creditor need not make demand for payment or performance by the principal before bringing suit.

In the absence of a statutory or contractual requirement,<sup>4</sup> it is not necessary that payment or performance of his obligation be first demanded of the principal,<sup>5</sup> even though there is a strong probability that the principal would have paid or performed if demand had been made,<sup>6</sup> and more especially where demand would have been useless;<sup>7</sup> nor is it requisite, before proceeding against sureties, that the principal be called on to account.<sup>8</sup> Demand on the sureties is not necessary before bringing suit against them,<sup>9</sup> since the commencement of the suit is a sufficient demand.<sup>10</sup>

§ 253. — Notice of Default

It is generally not necessary that sureties be notified of the default of the principal unless notice is required by statute or contract.

In the absence of a statute to the contrary or provisions in the contract so requiring, notice of the default of the principal need not be given to the sureties before they can be sued on the obligations,<sup>11</sup> even though the rules and by-laws of the obligee require such information to be given to them,<sup>12</sup> or the sureties are injured by lack of it,<sup>13</sup> since it is their duty to make inquiry and ascertain whether the principal is discharging the obligation resting on him.<sup>14</sup> An agreement by the obligee with the principal not to inform his sureties of his default will not release them if they do not make any inquiries.<sup>15</sup> On the other hand, where there is a stipulation in the contract for notice of default, compliance therewith is a condition precedent to an action against the sureties.<sup>16</sup>

§ 254. Defenses

A surety, when sued, may generally make the same defenses in an action at law as may be made in a court of equity.

Generally the surety may make the same defenses in an action at law as may be made in a court of equity.<sup>17</sup> Where the surety is, or has become, bound as a principal, he may not set up any defense arising out of the suretyship relation.<sup>18</sup> Non-performance of a contract between principal and creditor or obligee which is in no way connected with the surety's obligation is no defense to the surety,<sup>19</sup> nor can the surety defend on the ground that there has been no default when the contract performed by the principal is not a part of the original contract for the performance of which the surety became bound.<sup>20</sup> It is no defense that plaintiff refused to do more than his contract required.<sup>21</sup> The fact that the obligee has attempted to enforce the claim against the principal<sup>22</sup> or that a claim has been filed and allowed as against the principal's estate<sup>23</sup> is not a defense. It is no defense that the surety was not a party to the transaction wherein the principal breached his obligation.<sup>24</sup>

Many matters of defense available to a surety have already been considered in connection with the general treatment of the creation and existence of the relationship, discussed supra §§ 9-86, the nature and extent of the liability of the surety, supra §§ 87-115, and the discharge of the surety from his liability, supra §§ 116-244.

Waiver of one defense does not imply a waiver of other defenses available to the surety.<sup>25</sup>

Matters personal to a surety may be set up by him in his defense.<sup>26</sup>

Defense of payment

In suit on note against principal maker and sureties, principal maker's failure to move for new trial or to appeal after default judgment for plaintiff was rendered, notwithstanding plea of general issue with notice of payment by all defendants was undisposed of, did not operate as waiver of defense of payment on part of sureties, since, if note was paid, no action or inaction on part of principal maker could make sureties liable.—*Randall v. ## § 256. — Defenses of Cosurety Available to Surety

A surety may not urge a defense purely personal to a cosurety.

Defenses which are purely personal to a cosurety and not interposed by him may not be availed of by a surety.<sup>33</sup> So, where one of the cosureties is discharged in equity by the conduct of the creditor, a judgment in favor of the cosurety so discharged from liability does not operate to discharge a cosurety who is not in a position to avail himself of a like defense personal to himself.<sup>34</sup>

§ 257. Counterclaim and Set-Off

The availability of particular matters of counterclaim and set-off are discussed infra §§ 258-260.

§ 258. — Of Surety's Claim

Generally a surety may set off his claims against the plaintiff.

Subject to the rules relating to recoupment, set-off, and counterclaim generally, sureties, when sued, may set off their claims against plaintiff.<sup>35</sup> A surety may interpose as a counterclaim a judgment held by him against plaintiff,<sup>36</sup> and may counterclaim for damages arising out of the failure of plaintiff to perform an agreement which was the inducement of the surety to assume the relationship.<sup>37</sup> Where by statute the counterclaim must be in favor of all defendants, a surety cannot set up a personal debt due him from plaintiff in an action against him and his principal.<sup>38</sup>

§ 259. — Of Cosurety's Claim

A claim of a cosurety cannot be set off by a surety; but the cosurety may intervene to set off his own claim.

One surety cannot set off a claim of his cosurety,<sup>39</sup> but the cosurety can intervene for the purpose of setting off a claim against the creditor.<sup>40</sup>

§ 260. — Of Principal's Claim

- a. In joint action against principal and surety
- b. In suit against surety alone

a. In Joint Action against Principal and Surety

Generally, where the principal and surety are sued jointly, a claim in favor of the principal can be set off against the demand of the creditor or obligee.

Since a defense available to a principal is generally available to a surety, whatever defense is available to the principal by way of recoupment is also available to the surety.<sup>41</sup> Although there is some authority to the contrary,<sup>42</sup> generally, when the principal and surety are sued jointly, a claim in favor of the principal can be set off against the demand of the creditor or obligee,<sup>43</sup> against a re-

In action by bank against its former president and his son to collect interest on notes executed by son on which former president was surety, wherein defendants by way of set-off alleged that former president had left in the bank three hundred dollars of his salary with intention of applying it as a credit on interest due on the notes, defendants, although entitled to credit for the sum left with the bank, were not entitled to interest on such sum from date it was left until principal of the notes was satisfied, since

Claim in favor of principal only

Statute providing that counterclaim may be any new matter constituting cause of action in favor of defendant, or all of defendants if more than one, against plaintiff, or all of plaintiffs if more than one, does not apply where principal and surety are sued jointly, so that, in suit on attachment bond for damages for alleged wrongful issuance of writ of attachment in mortgage foreclosure action, principal on bond could file counterclaim based on deficiency judgment obtained in foreclosure action, although counterclaim was not in favor of surety on bond, since principal was primarily liable.—Imes v. Hamilton, 269 N.W. 757, 222 Iowa 777.

Surety without interest in subject matter

In action on bond against principal and surety, principal may plead set-off or cross action in subject matter of which surety has no interest.

lator,<sup>44</sup> or against an assignee,<sup>45</sup> unless, in the latter case, the instrument is negotiable and the assignee a bona fide holder in due course.<sup>46</sup> It has been held that the consent of the principal is necessary before the surety can avail himself of a set-off of the principal's claim<sup>47</sup> and that this consent is shown by their joining in the plea of set-off.<sup>48</sup>

If suit is brought on several distinct claims, to which a set-off is allowed, it should be applied ratably; and a surety for a part of the claims has no right to have it applied first to those debts for which he is liable.<sup>49</sup>

b. In Suit against Surety Alone

Generally, unless permitted by statute, a surety sued alone may not avail himself of a claim of the principal against the creditor where he has no interest in the claim.

In accordance with the rule that defenses available to the principal are likewise available to the surety, it has been held that a surety, when sued alone, may set off any claim which the principal may set off against the demand of the creditor;<sup>50</sup> and this privilege is secured to the surety by force of some statutes.<sup>51</sup> It is, however, generally held that, in the absence of a statute permitting it, a surety cannot, when sued alone, avail himself of a claim of the principal against the creditor where he has no interest in the claim<sup>52</sup> except on the insolvency of the principal<sup>53</sup> or the creditor,<sup>54</sup> or unless the principal consents thereto,<sup>55</sup> and it has been assigned to the surety.<sup>56</sup> It has been held that the assignment must have been made before the suit is brought.<sup>57</sup> The principal may intervene and set off a debt in an action against the surety alone,<sup>58</sup> and a surety sued alone may set off a credit due the principal where the principal has been made a party by cross complaint and both he and the creditor have consented to the adjudication of the credit.<sup>59</sup> Sureties cannot set off a de-

Test of rule prohibiting surety from setting up counterclaim asserting independent cause of action in favor of principal against creditor is whether principal is barred from bringing action on particular cause of action sought to be set forth in surety's counterclaim.—U. S. for Use and Benefit of Johnson v. Morley Const. Co., D.C.N.Y., 11 F. Supp. 841.

Independent claim

In action on surety bond guaranteeing payment by contractors to city of weekly sums for privilege of sorting and reclaiming waste materials at certain of the city's land dumps, surety could not assert claim that city diverted the materials belonging to the contractors, deprived contractors of certain of the dumps, and improperly separated garbage from refuse deposited at certain dumps, since the claim of the contractors was not a mere failure of consideration, but was an independent claim, for an amount far in excess of the claim against the surety.—City of New York v. Fidelity & Deposit Co., of Maryland, 3 N.Y.S. 2d 714, 253 App.Div. 676.

Statute permitting equitable defenses

In suit by subcontractors against principal contractor, which failed to answer, and surety, statute permitting equitable defenses to be interposed in law action was inapplicable and did not entitle surety to file counterclaim for damages resulting from delay in furnishing of materials, since surety had no legal right to interpose counterclaim.—U. S. for Use and Benefit of Johnson v. Morley Const. Co., D.C.N.Y., 11 F.Supp. 841.

mand which their principal would not be entitled to set off.<sup>60</sup> The claim of the principal must be due<sup>61</sup> and be a liquidated demand.<sup>62</sup> A statute providing for equitable set-off has been held to allow the surety to set off a debt of a principal who is a nonresident without property in the jurisdiction where the suit is brought;<sup>63</sup> but the right to plead equitable set-off may be waived.<sup>64</sup> A statute permitting the determination of a controversy between parties before the court where possible without prejudice to the rights of others will not permit a surety to counterclaim where the principal's rights would be prejudiced.<sup>65</sup>

Interest. Interest should be allowed on an amount due from the creditor to the principal when such amount is applied by way of set-off.<sup>66</sup>

§ 261. Conclusiveness of Adjudication against Principal in Action against Surety

As a general rule, in all cases where the liability of a surety is dependent on the outcome of litigation in which his principal is or may be involved, a judgment against the principal is binding and conclusive on the surety, in the absence of fraud or collusion or want of jurisdiction by the court; where the liability assumed by the surety is not contingent on the outcome of litigation in which his principal is or may be involved, a judgment against the principal is not conclusive against the surety.

For what purpose and to what extent a judgment against a principal may be introduced in evidence against the surety is a matter about which there is much contrariety of opinion in the decisions of the courts,<sup>67</sup> and it has been said to be difficult to find in the books a question on which the cases are in more hopeless conflict,<sup>68</sup> since whether or not a judgment against the principal is conclusive as to the surety must be determined from the nature of the surety's obligation and the language and terms of the contract of suretyship.<sup>69</sup>

As a general rule, in all cases where the liability of a surety is dependent on the outcome of litigation in which his principal is or may be involved, a judgment against the principal is binding and conclusive on the surety,<sup>70</sup> and the surety may not

- As exception to rule binding only parties
- The rule that a surety on particular types of bonds may be concluded by the judgment rendered against the principal is sometimes said to constitute an exception to interpose defenses which should or might have been set up in the action in which the judgment was recovered,<sup>71</sup> or require proof of the facts on which the judgment rests,<sup>72</sup> or attack the validity of the judgment,<sup>73</sup> except for fraud or collusion<sup>74</sup> or want of jurisdiction.<sup>75</sup> The rule is applicable even though the surety had no notice of the suit or opportunity to defend,<sup>76</sup> but it has also been held that in the absence of actual or implied knowledge or notice of the suit on the part of the surety the judgment is not conclusive as to his liability,<sup>77</sup> and it is only prima facie evidence that the surety is liable.<sup>78</sup> The surety is not concluded as to matters not in issue in the action in which the judgment was rendered,<sup>79</sup> such as defensive matters personal to the surety;<sup>80</sup> so a judgment against the principal is not conclusive that the contract of suretyship binds the surety,<sup>81</sup> and the surety may show that his liability does not extend to the obligation which is sought to be enforced.<sup>82</sup>

Where the liability assumed by the surety is not contingent on the outcome of litigation, in which his principal is or may be involved, a judgment against the principal is not conclusive against the surety,<sup>83</sup> and he may offer as a defense any matter which could have been interposed in the action in which the judgment was recovered,<sup>84</sup> and may show that the judgment was based on insufficient facts<sup>85</sup> or on incorrect rules of law.<sup>86</sup> Such a judgment against the principal is in some jurisdic-

the general rule that only parties to an action are bound by the judgment rendered therein, although it is also sometimes said that it does not in fact constitute an exception to the general rule but is based on a fair and reasonable interpretation of the contract.—Easton v. Boston Inv. Co., 196 P. 796, 51 Cal.App. 246—34 C.J. p 1050 notes 9-11.

Litigation of primary liability of principal

In absence of unequivocal language to contrary, surety can litigate primary liability of principal even though such liability has been conclusively established against principal in litigation to which surety was not party.—Sears, Roebuck & Co. v. 9 Avenue-31 Street Corporation, 9 N.E.2d 20, 274 N.Y. 388, remittitur amended 10 N.E.2d 589, 274 N.Y. 636.

tions held to be prima facie evidence against the surety<sup>87</sup> unless obtained by fraud or collusion,<sup>88</sup> but a judgment on matters not connected with the suretyship relation is not admissible.<sup>89</sup> In other jurisdictions the judgment is not, in such a case, admissible as evidence to charge the surety,<sup>90</sup> especially if the surety had no notice of the action against the principal,<sup>91</sup> unless the surety has so contracted,<sup>92</sup> and a recovery by one person on a bond is not evidence in an action by another person on the same bond.<sup>93</sup> The judgment may be admissible for other purposes<sup>94</sup> and is evidence of the fact of its rendition.<sup>95</sup>

Sureties having notice and opportunity to defend an action against their principal are, as a general rule, bound and concluded by the judgment rendered against the principal<sup>96</sup> except where it has been obtained by fraud or collusion;<sup>97</sup> and if not conclusive the judgment is at least prima facie evidence against the surety.<sup>98</sup> If the surety participates in the action against his principal, he is concluded as to the issues therein decided against the principal,<sup>99</sup> or issues which could have been raised,<sup>1</sup> even though suit against him was dismissed before trial,<sup>2</sup> but not as to matters not involved in, or material to, the first action.<sup>3</sup> A surety acting as witness for the principal has been held concluded by a judgment against the principal deciding matters on which the surety seeks to rely.<sup>4</sup>

A judgment by default against the principal has been held to be prima facie evidence of the surety's liability,<sup>5</sup> but not conclusive against him;<sup>6</sup> but it has also been held to be conclusive<sup>7</sup> in the absence of fraud or collusion.<sup>8</sup>

Where principal and surety are sued together, a default judgment against the principal has been held not to be admissible as evidence against the surety,<sup>9</sup> but it has also been held to be admissible as evidence against him,<sup>10</sup> and to constitute prima facie proof of the default by the principal and of the measure of damages.<sup>11</sup> If admitted, it constitutes no more than prima facie proof.<sup>12</sup>

Confessed judgment. Where a judgment against a principal, if contested, would be binding on the surety, a confessed judgment may be so regarded<sup>13</sup> unless there is fraud or collusion in the confession of judgment,<sup>14</sup> but it has also been held that such a judgment is not binding on the surety.<sup>15</sup>

§ 262. Jurisdiction and Venue

The venue of an action by a creditor against a surety is frequently a matter of special statutory regulation.

The venue of an action by a creditor against a surety is frequently a matter of special statutory regulation.<sup>16</sup> In some jurisdictions, by statute, suit may be brought against a surety company in the county of plaintiff's residence.<sup>17</sup> Other statutes allow suit against surety companies at the place where they become sureties, or where the principal can be sued.<sup>18</sup> A statute requiring suit to be brought in the county where one or more codefendants are found has been held inapplicable to suit against a foreign surety company<sup>19</sup> which may be brought in the county wherein plaintiff resides.<sup>20</sup> A statute providing for suit on a bond in any jurisdiction has been interpreted as denoting the place, county, or territorial limits within which any court authorized to entertain a suit on the bond sits.<sup>21</sup>

Where the liability of the principal has not been established, a court which has no jurisdiction of the action against the principal has no jurisdiction of an action against the surety.<sup>22</sup>

§ 263. Time to Sue, Limitations, and Laches

- a. In general
- b. Contractual provisions
- c. Laches

a. In General

An action against a surety must be brought within the time, if any, fixed by statute.

An action against a surety must be brought within the time, if any, fixed by statute,<sup>23</sup> and suit cannot be brought thereafter, although the obligee was ignorant of the suretyship.<sup>24</sup> The period of limitations begins to run from the time at which the surety becomes liable on his obligation.<sup>25</sup> The time will be extended only in accordance with the provisions of the statute,<sup>26</sup> and an oral promise by the surety to pay the debt will not extend the time or revive the action where the statute does not so provide.<sup>27</sup> Under statutes the running of the period

Place of incorporation of bonding company

(1) Statute relating to place where fidelity or bonding companies may be sued was held applicable to corporation incorporated under laws of United States or of any state having power to guarantee fidelity of persons holding positions of public or private trust.—Burns v. Duncan, 133 S.W.2d 1000, 23 Tenn.App. 374.

(2) Provision in state statute that nonresident and domestic fidelity and bonding companies may be sued

Surety of construction contractor

The claim of an owner of a building against the surety of the construction contractor is not barred by the limitation of time prescribed for suits against the surety by materialmen and laborers.—Costanza v. Cannata, 36 So.2d 627, 214 La. 29.

Statute relating to claim against estate

The statute relating to diligence in presentation of claim against estate when principal maker of a note dies does not contemplate that action must be taken as against sureties within one-year period fixed by filing of a claim against an estate.—Harris v. Buder, 62 N.E.2d 131, 326 Ill.App. 471.

27. Ky.—Sparkman's Guardian v. Huff, 98 S.W.2d 484, 266 Ky. 183.

"Obstruct or hinder"

Alleged statement of surety that he would pay note, or as much thereof as might not be paid by the principal, did not come within the interpretation of the words "obstruct or hinder" as used in statute providing that if surety shall abscond, conceal himself, or by removal from the state, or otherwise obstruct or hin-

of limitations may cease for a specified period on the death of the surety,<sup>28</sup> but the death of the principal will not so operate.<sup>29</sup> The statute in effect at the time of the breach governs, and not that in force at the time of the execution of the contract.<sup>30</sup> Failure to sue within the statutory period for one breach of a bond will not bar an action for a subsequent breach.<sup>31</sup> While the surety may be discharged by lapse of the period of limitation specially applicable to sureties, a mortgage given by him as security for the debt will not be barred until the debt itself is barred.<sup>32</sup>

The principal cannot waive the benefit of the statute for his surety.<sup>33</sup>

Premature action. An action brought against the surety before breach of the contract covered by the bond is premature in the absence of an anticipatory breach binding the surety.<sup>34</sup>

b. Contractual Provisions

Ordinarily the time within which an action against a surety may or must be brought may be fixed by contractual provisions.

Although such provisions have been held void as an attempt to nullify the general law of limitations applicable to written contracts,<sup>35</sup> ordinarily it is held that the time within which an action against a surety may or must be brought may be fixed by contractual provisions;<sup>36</sup> and no action can be brought after the expiration of the time so fixed<sup>37</sup> unless the delay has been occasioned by the surety.<sup>38</sup> Provisions limiting the time for bringing an action on the obligation must be reasonable;<sup>39</sup> and where the object of the bond would be defeated by a construction of such a provision according to its strict terms it will not be so construed.<sup>40</sup> The time at which the period begins to run depends on the terms of the limitations provision.<sup>41</sup> A provision for suit to be brought within a certain time after completion of a contract has been held not to apply to an action for damages for nonperformance.<sup>42</sup>

Waiver. Such a limitation may be waived by the surety,<sup>43</sup> and the waiver may be either express or implied.<sup>44</sup> The owner of a building in course of erection may waive the default of the contractor in failing to complete it within the time pre-der his being sued, the time of such obstruction shall not be construed as part of the time of limitation in statutes dealing with limitations in actions against sureties.—Jones' Ex'r v. Jones, 122 S.W.2d 779, 275 Ky. 753.

Rejection of tender of anticipatory breach

Lessors unequivocally rejecting alleged tender of anticipatory breach of lessee's contract to erect new building on leased premises within certain time could not sue surety on bond for performance of contract during such time, and could not revive tender, without consent of lessee and its surety, by commencing suit on bond for performance of contract.—*McCormick v. ### c. Laches

Independently of statutory or contractual limitations, the action of the creditor against the surety may be barred by laches.

Independently of statutory or contractual limitations, the action of the creditor against a surety may be barred by laches.<sup>47</sup> Mere delay will not amount to laches,<sup>48</sup> and if the action is commenced before the statute of limitations has run, or the time fixed by contract has expired, mere delay is not a defense to the action.<sup>49</sup> Plaintiff is not barred by laches where the delay was the result of his proceeding against the principal and a cosurety, by reason of which defendant's liability was materially reduced,<sup>50</sup> or by failure to take futile steps to prevent losses.<sup>51</sup> The rule that laches of its agents cannot be imputed to a government applies to actions by a government against a surety.<sup>52</sup>

Ordinarily only the obligee or beneficiaries of the bond can enforce the liability of sureties thereon.

Ordinarily only the obligee or beneficiaries of the bond can enforce the liability of sureties thereon.<sup>53</sup> Persons not expressly named as obligees in a bond may recover thereon where they are included within a class to which the right has been given by statute<sup>54</sup> or by an express provision in the instrument.<sup>55</sup> Where the instrument is a promissory note which has not been delivered to the payee named therein, it has been held that the surety's liability cannot be enforced by one not the payee who advanced money thereon,<sup>56</sup> even in the name of the payee with his consent,<sup>57</sup> unless the sureties consented to such advancement;<sup>58</sup> but there is other authority which holds that the person advancing the money may have a right of action against the surety.<sup>59</sup>

join with the obligee in an action on the bond,<sup>61</sup> especially where the contract so provides;<sup>62</sup> but one who is not a beneficiary cannot enforce it.<sup>63</sup> Where an agent in whose name a contract is made is regarded as trustee of an express trust, he may maintain an action against a surety in his own name under provisions allowing actions by trustees of express trusts to be so maintained.<sup>64</sup> Where the surety contract is under seal the obligee therein may maintain an action against the surety although the beneficial interest is in another.<sup>65</sup> Under a statute requiring actions to be brought in the name of the real party in interest, an action against a principal and sureties cannot be regarded as an action on behalf of the sureties.<sup>66</sup>

Indemnitor. One who has entered an agreement to indemnify the surety cannot enforce the surety's liability on his bond.<sup>67</sup>

Assignees. The right to enforce the obligation of the surety may be assigned,<sup>68</sup> although the contract does not contain the words "successors and assigns;"<sup>69</sup> but the claim against a surety cannot be transferred separately from that against the principal, since whoever has the latter is entitled to the former.<sup>70</sup> A materialman, to whom the contractor assigned his building or improvement contract has been held to be in no better position to recover from the surety on the contractor's bond than the contractor would have been for his own default.<sup>71</sup>

Assignee held without right

Even if surety bond which ran to vendees and their legal representatives and secured performance of vendor's agreement to obtain extension of lease passed to vendees' assignee with assignment of lease, assignee could not recover on bond, where landlord refused to give extension because assignee had not paid rent for two months and because the assignee, which had assigned for benefit of creditors, was not desirable tenant.—Shiya v. Erickson, 282 N.Y.S. 812, 156 Misc. 738.

Interest of assignees

Where a bond was furnished for the benefit of one party and his assignees, assignees to the extent of their assigned interest stood in the shoes of the party as to rights under the bond.—Feutz v. Massachusetts Bonding & Ins. Co., D.C.Mo., 85 F. Supp. 418.

Bond for payment of rent

The assignee of a lease and a bond given to secure the payment of the rent could maintain an action on the lease and bond against the sureties.—Gardner v. Stangebye, 185 N.W. 369, 48 N.D. 513.

entire case.<sup>75</sup> Accordingly, under statutory provisions allowing joinder of parties severally liable on the same obligation, a principal and surety so liable may be sued together<sup>76</sup> or separately.<sup>77</sup> Under express statutory provisions in some jurisdictions, a surety may be sued alone in certain enumerated instances or situations,<sup>78</sup> and in all other instances or situations not enumerated the principal must be joined with the surety.<sup>79</sup> Failure to join the principal in an action against the surety is proper where judgment has been obtained against the principal,<sup>80</sup> particularly when expressly so provided by statute.<sup>81</sup> A principal and surety may be joined as defendants in the same action only where their obligations are joint,<sup>82</sup> and they may not be joined in the same action where the surety's liability arose on a collateral undertaking.<sup>83</sup> Stipulations that the principal must be made a party are sufficiently complied with where, by leave of court and without objection, the trustee of the insolvent principal is made a party defendant.<sup>84</sup>

All the sureties may be joined in one action,<sup>85</sup> and sureties on a bond may be joined with the sureties on a subsequent bond executed as additional security for the performance of the same contract.<sup>86</sup> Sureties who are not liable for the same demand may not be joined.<sup>87</sup> Where by statute one surety may be released or discharged without releasing or discharging the other sureties, a surety so released need not be made a party defendant to an action against the remaining sureties.<sup>88</sup>

In equity the principal and all of the sureties should be made parties defendant<sup>89</sup> unless insolvent<sup>90</sup> or beyond the jurisdiction.<sup>91</sup> If the bill is filed for the purpose of reaching property of the principal only, the surety is not a necessary,<sup>92</sup> although he is a proper,<sup>93</sup> party; nor is a surety a necessary party where the object of the suit is an accounting by the principal.<sup>94</sup> A cosurety must be made a party where a bill is brought to enforce a judgment lien on the land of a surety.<sup>95</sup>

Contracts for benefit of third person. An action may be brought by one for whose benefit the contract was made against the principal and surety without joining as defendant the obligee on the bond.<sup>96</sup>

Sureties for limited amounts. Where several sureties are independently liable for limited amounts, in an action against some of them the others are proper,<sup>97</sup> but not necessary,<sup>98</sup> parties.

Death of principal or surety. A creditor can enforce his claim against the property of a deceased surety without making the other sureties parties,<sup>99</sup> and in like manner he may sue a surviving surety without making the personal representative of a deceased surety a party.<sup>1</sup> A statute which provides that, except in certain enumerated cases, no surety shall be sued unless the principal is joined with him requires the principal to be joined in a suit against the estate of a deceased surety.<sup>2</sup>

In a suit in equity, if a principal or surety be dead, his personal representative should be joined with the surviving party.<sup>3</sup>

c. New Parties; Intervention

General rules with respect to the bringing in of new parties and intervention are applicable in an action against a surety to enforce his liability.

General rules with respect to the bringing in of new parties are applicable in an action against a surety to enforce his liability.<sup>4</sup> Subject to the rules as to intervention generally, and under statutes providing for the intervention of a person not a party who has an interest in the subject of the action, in a proper case the principal may intervene in an action by the creditor against the surety,<sup>5</sup> but in the absence of such an interest in the subject of the action as will support the right he will not be permitted to intervene.<sup>6</sup> Where consent of the adverse party is necessary, a principal cannot intervene where no consent is given.<sup>7</sup> The surety may intervene to set up a defense if the principal is insolvent and does not defend, and the rights of the surety are endangered.<sup>8</sup>

In an action on an agreement to become surety, defendant is not entitled to have his contemplated principal made a party defendant.<sup>9</sup>

§ 265. Process and Appearance

The rules relating to the necessity and sufficiency of service of process in civil actions generally apply to actions by a creditor against a surety.

In accordance with the rules relating to the necessity and sufficiency of service of process in civil actions generally, in an action by a creditor or obligee against a surety it is essential that the surety be served with process<sup>10</sup> unless there is a statute to the contrary which enters into, and forms a part of, the contract.<sup>11</sup> Service on the principal is not requisite in order to obtain a valid judgment against the surety<sup>12</sup> unless the principal and surety are joined in one action and a joint judgment is rendered against them.<sup>13</sup> Many statutes provide as to the manner of service of process on surety companies, and service made in accordance with the statute is sufficient.<sup>14</sup>

§ 266. Declaration, Petition, or Complaint

In an action against a surety, every material fact which constitutes the plaintiff's cause of action must be alleged.

principal should be clearly set forth<sup>16</sup> and a breach thereof alleged,<sup>17</sup> but it is unnecessary for plaintiff to set forth in hæc verba the contract with the principal where he alleges the substance of the agreement<sup>18</sup> or to set forth the specific matters constituting the breach, where he makes a general allegation thereof.<sup>19</sup> The declaration or petition should set forth the contract of suretyship,<sup>20</sup> and it should sufficiently show that defendant is charged as a surety;<sup>21</sup> but where the principal and surety are bound jointly the suretyship need not be noticed.<sup>22</sup> An averment of a breach by the surety is unnecessary.<sup>23</sup> It is not necessary to allege any effort to collect from the principal<sup>24</sup> or to allege the insolvency of the principal<sup>25</sup> where such matters are not essential to the liability of the surety. Where, by statute, remedies against the principal must first be exhausted before proceeding against the surety, an averment that the principal had no property is sufficient to show compliance with such requirements.<sup>26</sup>

In determining whether a complaint states a cause of action the whole pleading must be considered.<sup>30</sup>

the complaint, is not sufficient to charge the surety with the execution of the bond<sup>32</sup> or to require of him an affirmative denial of such proposition.<sup>33</sup> When it is necessary that the bond of the principal and sureties be executed by the principal, if the complaint shows that the principal never executed the contract it should also set out that the sureties waived its execution by him,<sup>34</sup> although it has been held that in such a case an allegation of delivery by defendant is sufficient.<sup>35</sup>

Consideration. As a general rule the petition must contain an allegation that the surety received consideration,<sup>36</sup> and a consideration between the principal and the obligee must be shown;<sup>37</sup> but it is not necessary to allege that the surety received payment for his undertaking.<sup>38</sup> Consideration for a supplemental agreement to incur obligations outside the bond must be alleged.<sup>39</sup>

Performance and fulfillment of conditions. Where the obligation of the surety is predicated on performance by plaintiff of his part of the contract, it has been held necessary that plaintiff allege performance on his part,<sup>40</sup> and a complaint which shows on its face a failure to perform such conditions is bad;<sup>41</sup> but where it is the principal's breach which imposes liability on the surety it has been held that it is not essential for plaintiff to allege performance on his part in order to fasten prima facie liability on the surety.<sup>42</sup> The complaint must show satisfaction of conditions precedent to the surety's liability,<sup>43</sup> but a general allegation of performance of such conditions is sufficient.<sup>44</sup> If performance was waived, the facts constituting such waiver must be pleaded.<sup>45</sup> Where notice of principal's default is made a condition precedent to the surety's liability, compliance with such condition must be pleaded<sup>46</sup> unless the matters assigned as breaches lie as much within the knowledge of the surety as of plaintiff;<sup>47</sup> and, if notice is not a condition precedent, the failure to give it is matter of defense which need not be negated.<sup>48</sup> A complaint which shows on its face noncompliance with conditions by the obligee is bad.<sup>49</sup>

Alteration of contract. If a contract authorizes alterations therein, and alterations have been made, they should be set out,<sup>50</sup> but minor changes in plans and specifications not amounting to a new or substituted contract need not be alleged;<sup>51</sup> and, if the contract provides that an extension of time shall not release a surety, an extension, if made, need not be alleged.<sup>52</sup>

Nonpayment. It has been held that nonpayment of the obligation must be clearly set forth,<sup>53</sup> but a statement of facts which shows nonpayment is sufficient without an express allegation to that effect.<sup>54</sup> Nonpayment of the obligation need not be alleged where payment is regarded as a matter of defense.<sup>55</sup>

b. Matters of release or discharge

a. In General

The general rules governing pleas, answers, or affidavits of defense in civil actions apply as to the sufficiency of such pleadings in actions against a surety.

The general rules governing pleas, answers, or affidavits of defense in civil actions apply as to the sufficiency of such pleadings in actions against a surety.<sup>64</sup> Where separate actions are instituted on the same instrument, a plea filed in one cannot be extended to the others, but a plea must be filed in each suit.<sup>65</sup> Special or affirmative defenses should be pleaded specially,<sup>66</sup> such as delivery of the instrument without authority,<sup>67</sup> lack of consideration,<sup>68</sup> limitations,<sup>69</sup> fraud, duress, or misrepresentation,<sup>70</sup> and nonperformance of conditions precedent by plaintiff.<sup>71</sup> Likewise, if the surety wishes to avail himself of his statutory exemption from

Plea to require extraneous proof of accounts and agreement

Where sureties expressly contracted with obligee of accounts to pay amount due agreeing that any acknowledgment or approval thereof by the maker should be binding on them, sureties when sued thereon were bound to raise the issue of their correctness and execution by plea of non est factum in order to prevent the introduction of the accounts and agreement in evidence without extraneous proof.—W. (2) So, in suit on note, plea that defendant signed note as surety in renewal of note signed by her as surety while her husband was living, and that she received no consideration from original transaction and no new consideration was insufficient as against general demurrer, where plea did not allege that in renewal transaction there was no extension of time of payment or forbearance to sue given principal.—Singleton v. 69. Ky.—Moore's Adm'x v. Brookins, 126 S.W.2d 1059, 277 Ky. 668.

Affidavit of defense to merits

Whether or not a limitation in a bond given as surety for performance of a contract restricting the obligee to commencing suit on or before the last day for performance of the contract is a reasonable limitation is a question which can be raised only by an affidavit of defense to the merits, and it cannot be determined on an affidavit of defense raising questions of law in an action on the bond, especially where the statement of claim avers plaintiff was induced to delay bringing suit within the period fixed by the bond by reason of the fact that negotiations with defendant for payment of its claim were taking place up to the day before suit was brought.—Harmony Tp. School Dist. v. U. S. Fidelity & Guaranty Co., 53 Pa.Dist. & Co. 547.

70. Pa.—Bloomfield Trust Co. v. Trojanowski, 147 A. 847, 298 Pa. 61.

suit until the principal has been sued, he must plead it specifically.<sup>72</sup> Where it is sought to defend on the ground that the surety signed only on express agreement that other sureties were to be obtained, the plea must distinctly allege the incompleteness of the instrument<sup>73</sup> and notice to plaintiff of the condition.<sup>74</sup>

In order to obtain any benefit arising out of the relationship, the surety must set up the fact of suretyship and demand his privileges;<sup>75</sup> and where the fact of suretyship is not apparent from the face of the instrument he must aver knowledge of the suretyship by the creditor<sup>76</sup> and acceptance of defendant as surety by the creditor.<sup>77</sup> An answer setting up the suretyship merely is not a bar to the action but only matter for ground of direction as to execution on the judgment.<sup>78</sup>

Admissions. The rule that matters not traversed or denied are deemed admitted applies to the pleas or answers of a surety.<sup>79</sup> If the sureties unite with the principal in a plea to the merits, they admit the suretyship.<sup>80</sup> An admission in the answer that misappropriation occurred on the date alleged in the petition is not an admission that such misappropriation was within the terms of the contract so as to render the surety liable therefor.<sup>81</sup> A plea of performance admits the execution of the instrument.<sup>82</sup>

by plaintiff, when relied on as a basis of recovery of damages by the surety, should be set up by way of counterclaim.<sup>83</sup> Where a principal becomes a party defendant in an action against a surety, he may in his answer counterclaim against plaintiff,<sup>84</sup> and dismissal of the action by plaintiff will not prevent litigation of the counterclaim.<sup>85</sup> In an action against several makers of a note, a claim in favor of one of them may not be pleaded by him as a set-off unless he alleges that he is the principal and that the other makers are only sureties.<sup>86</sup>

Joint or separate pleas or answers. Where suit is brought against principal and sureties, each may sever and plead as many pleas as are necessary;<sup>87</sup> the surety may plead separately a defense which is personal to him,<sup>88</sup> and he may set up defenses of his principal by joint or separate plea.<sup>89</sup> A successful plea by one defendant discharges the others unless the matter of the plea is of a character going to the personal discharge of the pleader, of which the others could take no advantage,<sup>90</sup> and so a defense pleaded by the principal, not personal to him, inures to the benefit of the surety.<sup>91</sup> Where the defense is in its nature joint, several defendants may join in the same plea,<sup>92</sup> and where they join in pleas they cannot afterward sever and plead matter of personal discharge.<sup>93</sup> If the principal and surety are sued jointly, a joint plea or answer must be good as to both,<sup>94</sup> and if they join in a plea which is sufficient as for one but not for the

b. Matters of Release or Discharge

- (1) In general
- (2) Payment or performance
- (3) Extension of time
- (4) Failure to sue principal
- (5) Alteration of instrument or contract

(1) In General

Matters of release or discharge must be specially pleaded.

Matters of release or discharge must be specially pleaded.<sup>98</sup> If the surety sets up a discharge by reason of some act of plaintiff which injured him, he must allege the acts which caused such injury.<sup>99</sup> A plea of a release of the surety on condition must allege performance of the condition by defendant.<sup>1</sup> He must specially plead release of his principal,<sup>2</sup> and such a plea must be certain and definite.<sup>3</sup> An averment that the surety has been "lulled into security by the surrender" of a note to the principal by plaintiff sufficiently indicates knowledge of the surrender by the surety, and prejudice.<sup>4</sup> An allegation that plaintiff, a bank, had not applied money of the principal "on deposit, and payable to his order," sufficiently shows that the deposit was a general one, and liable to appropriation on the debt.<sup>5</sup>

Relinquishment or loss of securities. The surety must plead specially a release by reason of the relinquishment or loss of securities by the creditor,<sup>6</sup> and the plea of relinquishment must show the value of such security<sup>7</sup> and that the release was without the consent of the surety;<sup>8</sup> and such defense cannot be made by alleging a change made in the contract.<sup>9</sup> A plea of loss of security which shows that persons other than the surety and creditor were interested in the security is bad.<sup>10</sup>

(2) Payment or Performance

A surety relying on payment as a discharge or release must generally plead it specially and set forth all material facts.

In accordance with the general rules governing the pleading of payment, considered in Payment §§ 83-85, a surety relying on payment as a discharge or release must generally plead it specially<sup>11</sup> and set forth all material facts.<sup>12</sup> An equitable discharge of a surety will not support a plea of payment.<sup>13</sup>

(3) Extension of Time

The surety must specially plead an extension of time to the principal.

The surety must specially plead an extension of time to the principal.<sup>14</sup> If an extension of time to the principal is claimed as a defense, the plea should aver that plaintiff had knowledge of the suretyship,<sup>15</sup> that the extension was given without the surety's consent,<sup>16</sup> that there was a consideration therefor,<sup>17</sup> and of what the consideration consisted.<sup>18</sup> The time for which the extension was granted should be named,<sup>19</sup> and if it shows on its face that there was no definite time, no agreement, and no consideration, the plea is bad.<sup>20</sup> Facts which prove the extension need not be pleaded.<sup>21</sup> A plea that the principal had executed a promissory note to plaintiff does not indicate an extension.<sup>22</sup> A plea that extension was given on receiving a note must aver acceptance by plaintiff.<sup>23</sup> Where a binding extension does not discharge the surety except to the amount of loss or damage caused by such extension, a plea suggesting hypotheses, contingencies, and possibilities of loss, without stating in form or substance that the extension caused loss, is bad,<sup>24</sup> and one which does not show loss is bad.<sup>25</sup>

(4) Failure to Sue Principal

Where the surety relies on a discharge by the failure of the creditor to proceed, after notice, against the principal, or against security in the creditor's hands, a plea that the plaintiff did not proceed against the principal on receipt of notice to sue from the surety should state with certainty all the material facts.

Where the surety relies on a discharge by the failure of the creditor to proceed, after notice, against the principal, or against security in the possession of the creditor, a plea that plaintiff did not proceed against the principal on receipt of notice to sue from the surety should state with certainty all the material facts,<sup>26</sup> alleging that the notice was in writing, when this is required by the statute,<sup>27</sup> and that the principal was solvent at the time notice was given,<sup>28</sup> but defendant need not state that he apprehended that the principal was about to become insolvent or remove from the state,<sup>29</sup> or that plaintiff had notice of defendant's character as surety.<sup>30</sup> It is not necessary that the notice be set out; and, if set out, an error therein is not fatal.<sup>31</sup> The failure of plaintiff to sue can be stated in general terms; and the exact time of delay need not be named.<sup>32</sup> An answer that the surety has been discharged by failure of plaintiff to bring suit after notice to do so should aver that suit could have been brought at the time notice was given,<sup>33</sup> and that the surety was injured, exposed to greater liability, or his risk increased, by the failure of plaintiff to sue.<sup>34</sup> Where statutes bar an action against the surety after a certain time has elapsed after notice to sue the principal, a plea which substantially follows the statute is good.<sup>35</sup>

(5) Alteration of Instrument or Contract

As a general rule, discharge of the surety by an alteration of the instrument or contract, in order to be available as a defense, must be specially pleaded.

As a general rule, discharge of the surety by an alteration of the instrument or contract, in order to be available as a defense, must be specially pleaded,<sup>36</sup> and the changes made should be set out.<sup>37</sup>

Md.—Leppert v. Flaggs, 60 A. 450, 101 Md. 71.

Under general rules of pleading in civil actions, a replication in an action by a creditor or obligee against a surety must deny or set up matter in avoidance of defendant's answer.<sup>38</sup> Where the answer of defendant is in effect a denial of liability, a reply is not required to complete the issue.<sup>39</sup> To the answer of a surety that the name of a new surety was added to a note without his consent, a reply that defendant, with full knowledge of the facts, fully ratified the note, and agreed to pay, sufficiently alleges a ratification;<sup>40</sup> but, to an answer alleging that the note was signed after delivery without consideration, a reply that defendant agreed to pay one half of the note if another surety would pay one half, which the latter had agreed to do, is insufficient in not showing with whom the agreement was made, or the performance of the condition.<sup>41</sup> A replication showing an acknowledgment of liability by the surety may be sufficient, even though it does not allege the time of the acknowledgment.<sup>42</sup> Where the plea is that defendant was discharged by failure of plaintiff to sue after defendant had notified him to do so, plaintiff cannot recover without pleading that defendant has not sustained any injury.<sup>43</sup> Where defendant pleads that plaintiff obtained, in a prior suit, a verdict on a counterclaim for the identical damages claimed in the present action, a replication merely alleging that the recoupment, in the former suit, was directed to special counts only, which were not submitted to the jury, without showing that the plea of recoupment was withdrawn or disallowed, or that the finding did not extinguish all of his claim against the surety, is demurrable.<sup>44</sup>

§ 269. Issues, Proof, and Variance

In an action by a creditor or obligee against a surety, only such matters as are put in issue and supported by evidence can be considered, the proof must conform to the pleadings, and matters in issue need not be proved.

In accordance with the rules relating to issues, proof, and variance in civil actions generally, in an action by a creditor or obligee against a surety, only such matters as are put in issue and supported by evidence can be considered;<sup>45</sup> the proof must conform to the pleadings,<sup>46</sup> and matters not in issue need not be proved.<sup>47</sup> One who states a cause of action against defendant as surety, but proves an action against him as principal, cannot recover,<sup>48</sup> and, where the sureties have alleged one defense, evidence of a different defense is inadmissible.<sup>49</sup> Where the surety desires to prove error in a decree against the principal, the errors must be pleaded.<sup>50</sup> An allegation in a declaration on a bond that the sureties consented in writing to an extension of time does not change the form of action from debt on a specialty to assumpsit so as to make the bond inadmissible.<sup>51</sup> A variance between the evidence offered by a surety, and the allegations in his answer, will not be fatal if the evidence sustains the gist of his defense.<sup>52</sup>

Under the general issue evidence is admissible to show an extension of time releasing the surety;<sup>53</sup> discharge by failure to comply with an agreement to secure the signature of a cosurety;<sup>54</sup> or that plaintiff has enough money of the principal to satisfy the demand.<sup>55</sup> In some jurisdictions, under a general denial of execution or the general issue, a surety may show that, after he signed the bond, and without his knowledge, it was altered, as by the erasure of a signature of a cosurety and addition of another,<sup>56</sup> while in others evidence of a material alteration is not admissible.<sup>57</sup> Where evidence of payment is admissible under the general denial when nonpayment is alleged in the declara-

§ 270. Presumptions and Burden of Proof

The general rules relating to presumptions in civil actions apply in an action by a creditor or obligee against a surety. In such an action, the plaintiff has the burden of proving matters which are essential to his cause of action, and the surety has the burden of proving an affirmative defense.

The general rules relating to presumptions in civil actions apply in an action by a creditor or obligee against a surety.<sup>59</sup>

In accordance with the rules relating to burden of proof in civil actions generally, in an action by a creditor or obligee against a surety, plaintiff has the burden of proving matters which are essential to his cause of action,<sup>60</sup> such as execution of the contract of suretyship,<sup>61</sup> default or breach of the principal,<sup>62</sup> loss or damage sustained as a result of the default or breach,<sup>63</sup> and liability of the surety therefor.<sup>64</sup> The burden is on plaintiff to prove that he gave notice of default where so required,<sup>65</sup> and to prove waiver by the surety of matters operating as a discharge.<sup>66</sup> Where loss or relinquishment of security in plaintiff's hands discharges the surety, the burden is on plaintiff to show that the surety was not injured by the act of plaintiff releasing or substituting the security,<sup>67</sup> or that the surety assented to the release or substitution.<sup>68</sup>

Coverage of surety bond

Rebuttable presumption exists that surety bond covers only transactions occurring after its execution.—Commonwealth v. Ramsey, 171 A. 575, 314 Pa. 508.

Misappropriation of funds

Where funds collected by principal are not paid on demand, it will be presumed in determining surety's liability that such funds were misappropriated at time of their receipt.—City of Salisbury v. Lysterly, 180 S.E. 701, 208 N.C. 386.

Renewal note

Where renewal note does not obligate all parties to original note, it is not presumed that it was accepted in payment of original, with respect to discharging sureties.—Farmers' Nat. Bank v. Jones, 28 S.W.2d 787, 234 Ky. 591, 70 A.L.R. 335.

Loss or damage

In mortgagee's action for breach of bond for completion of building, trier of facts could properly assume that interest on investment along with taxes and insurance were losses flowing from failure to receive finished building, in absence of a showing to the contrary.—Prudence Co. v. Fidelity & Deposit Co. of Maryland, N.Y., 56 S.Ct. 387, 297 U.S. 198, 80 L.Ed. 581, motion denied 56 S.Ct. 679, amended on other grounds 56 S.Ct. 935, 298 U.S. 642, 80 L.Ed. 1374.

Consideration for extension of time for payment

On question whether vendor's subsequent letter extending time for payment was supported by separate consideration so as to release surety of purchaser under land contract, writing itself carried presumption of consideration, although presumption could be overcome by testimony to the contrary.—Berkowitz v. Tyderko, Limited, 57 P.2d 173, 13 Cal.App.2d 561.

50 C.J. p 212 note 3.

One not party to bond cannot recover thereon without proving that it was executed for the use and benefit of third persons, and that he comes within the class intended to be protected.—Southwestern Dredging Corporation v. Chicago, R. I. & P. Ry. Co., 32 P.2d 274, 168 Okl. 217.

61. Ala.—J. R. Watkins Co. v. Stimpson, 6 So.2d 430, 242 Ala. 359.

Signature of surety

The burden of proof is on the creditor to establish the genuineness of the surety's signature, where he denied signing the contract.—J. R. Watkins Medical Co. v. Montgomery, 215 S.W. 638, 140 Ark. 487.

62. Cal.—Hubermann v. National Surety Co., 174 P. 79, 37 Cal.App. 569.

50 C.J. p 213 note 4.

Delay in performance by principal

In action on bond securing building contract requiring completion within sixty working days under which work was suspended without contractor's fault to permit owner to change drawings, burden was on owner to show how much of the delay was attributable to contractor's fault and how many working days prior to contractor's default were used in performing work required by contract as amended.—Massachusetts Bonding & Insurance Co. v. John R. Thompson Co., C.C.A. Mo., 88 F.2d 825, certiorari denied

50 C.J. p 212 note 3 [d].

Expenditures to complete contract

In action by church on bond of company contracting to furnish marble facing for chapel to recover amount paid by church for marble in excess of contract price after contractor's default, burden was on plaintiff to prove that all money advanced by it to contractor before default was necessarily and reasonably spent in producing and transporting marble, but it need not prove that expenditures were reasonably, necessarily, prudently, or wisely made.—Corporation of President of Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-Day Saints v. Hartford Accident & Indemnity Co., 95 P.2d 736, 98 Utah 297.

64. Tex.—Etna Casualty & Surety Co. v. Russell, Com.App., 24 S.W.2d 385, rehearing denied 33 S.W.2d 189—Means v. Floyd West & Co., Civ.App., 74 S.W.2d 518.

Notice by surety to collect debt

Where plaintiff fails to sue the principal after notice by the surety to collect the debt from the principal immediately, plaintiff has the burden of proving that suit would have been futile at the time notice was given.—Strickler v. Burkholder, 47 Pa. 476.

65. U.S.—New Amsterdam Casualty Co. v. Farmers' Co-op. Union, C.C.A.Kan., 2 F.2d 214.

67. Tex.—Hatch v. First State Bank, Civ.App., 270 S.W. 1093.

68. N.J.—Van Hoesen v. Gelfen,

Where the principal has been released from liability, it has been held that the burden of proving the surety's assent to the release is on plaintiff.<sup>69</sup> Where the liability of a surety is made to depend on some material condition expressed in the suretyship contract, a compliance with the terms of the condition must be proved by plaintiff.<sup>70</sup>

The surety has the burden of proving an affirmative defense.<sup>71</sup> The surety has the burden of proving want of consideration for the principal obligation,<sup>72</sup> or illegality of consideration,<sup>73</sup> or that the default of the principal occurred prior to the contract of suretyship.<sup>74</sup> In like manner, the burden is on the surety to show that he has been discharged by some act of plaintiff,<sup>75</sup> such as failure of the creditor to sue the principal debtor after notice,<sup>76</sup> or release of the principal;<sup>77</sup> or to show injury by substitution of one security for another;<sup>78</sup> or to prove that the obligee acquiesced in unlawful performance by the principal.<sup>79</sup> Where statutes require, in a proper case, procedure against a principal before proceeding against the surety, the surety must prove that the principal was within the jurisdiction of the court, so that he might be first proceeded against, as required by statute, in order to take advantage of his exemption.<sup>80</sup> Where a judgment against a principal is prima facie evidence against the surety, if a judgment has been obtained against his principal for fraudulent acts, the burden is on the surety to show that such acts were not fraudulent.<sup>81</sup> One who is sued as a joint debtor has the burden of proving that he was a mere surety if such relationship is not shown on the face of the instrument.<sup>82</sup>

Although it has been held that the burden is on plaintiff to show performance and compliance on his part with the terms of the contract,<sup>83</sup> it has otherwise been held that the surety has the burden of showing nonperformance or breach.<sup>84</sup> The burden is on the surety to prove payment as a defense,<sup>85</sup> but, where the surety by general denial puts in issue plaintiff's allegation of nonpayment, it has been held that plaintiff has the burden of proving such allegation.<sup>86</sup> Where the surety claims payment by transfer of certain conveyances, the burden is on plaintiff to show that these were mere-

Violation of statute

In wholesaler's action against retailer and sureties, sureties attempting to avoid liability by pleading that wholesaler and retailer were engaged in selling drugs and medicines in violation of statute had burden of establishing defense.—W. T. Rawleigh Co. v. Shogren, 257 N. W. 102, 192 Minn. 483.

Excessive expenditure

In owner's action against surety on building contractor's bond for amount spent by plaintiff to complete work after contractor's default, defendant must show wherein reasonable expenditure was exceeded.—Corporation of President of Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-Day Saints v. 50 C.J. p 213 note 9 [a].

Knowledge and acceptance as surety

Apparent principal, pleading his suretyship in action on either negotiable or nonnegotiable instrument, must prove that plaintiff not only knew of suretyship, but accepted defendant as surety.—Granger v. Harper, 17 P.2d 135, 217 Cal. 16.

ly security;<sup>87</sup> and, where payment made by the principal before being adjudicated a bankrupt has been returned by plaintiff after a claim of preference by the trustee in bankruptcy, plaintiff may have the burden of proving that the payment was a preference.<sup>88</sup>

Conditional execution. Where it is claimed that the bond was executed and delivered on condition, the burden is on the surety to prove the condition,<sup>89</sup> and that the obligee had notice of it;<sup>90</sup> but, where there is no evidence that the surety knew of the delivery of the suretyship contract in violation of the condition under which it was signed, there is no duty on the part of the surety to prove notice to plaintiff.<sup>91</sup> Where the bond is incomplete for failure of the principal to sign, the burden is on plaintiff to prove that the bond was executed and delivered in an incomplete condition with the purpose of the surety to be bound.<sup>92</sup>

Alteration of contract. The burden is on the surety to prove an alteration of the contract,<sup>93</sup> and, while it has been held that he has the burden of proving that he did not assent to the alteration,<sup>94</sup> it has also been held that the burden of showing assent is on plaintiff.<sup>95</sup> Where the principal and surety disclaim any knowledge as to who made the alteration, the burden is on plaintiff who had possession of the instrument to explain the alteration.<sup>96</sup>

Extension of time. The burden of proof to show an extension of time is on the surety.<sup>97</sup> In this connection he has the burden of proving the elements essential to an extension discharging a surety, such as a binding and enforceable contract<sup>98</sup> supported by adequate consideration.<sup>99</sup> Plaintiff has the burden of proving a valid subsisting obligation where extension is claimed,<sup>1</sup> and it has been held that he must prove that the surety, after a discharge by an extension of time or otherwise, made a new promise<sup>2</sup> or assented to the extension,<sup>3</sup> although as to this there is also authority holding that the surety has this burden.<sup>4</sup>

Usury. After proof of usury, the burden is on plaintiff to show that the surety signed with knowledge of the usury.<sup>5</sup>

§ 271. Admissibility of Evidence

The general rules governing the admissibility of evidence in civil cases apply in an action by a creditor or obligee against a surety.

In accordance with, and subject to, the general rules governing the admissibility of evidence in civil cases, in an action by a creditor or obligee against a surety, plaintiff may introduce any competent evidence to establish liability,<sup>6</sup> and the amount of loss or damage he has suffered by reason of the principal's default.<sup>7</sup> Plaintiff may in-

Altered note

(1) The subsequent alteration of a note without consent does not render it inadmissible as evidence against one who had signed his name thereto as surety.—Dwinnell v. McKibben, 61 N.W. 985, 93 Iowa 331.

(2) The erasure by pen of the middle initial in the designation of a payee in a promissory note is an immaterial alteration where it is merely the correction of a mistake, so that the altered note is admissible in evidence without explanation of the alteration in an action by the payee against the surety.—Cole v. Hills, 44 N.H. 227.

(3) Fact that surety's name on note was in different colored ink and inserted between names of other signers does not show alteration precluding its introduction in evidence.—Bowers v. Hefebower, 243 Ill.App. 129.

7. D.C.—Zipkin v. Investors Syndicate, 152 F.2d 678, 80 U.S.App.D.C. 302.

introduce any competent evidence to show nonpayment<sup>8</sup> or default,<sup>9</sup> that notice of default was given,<sup>10</sup> the nature of the notice to sue,<sup>11</sup> and assent to extension of time,<sup>12</sup> and the creditor can show a conversation between himself and the principal indicating that the creditor was induced to grant an extension on a representation by the principal that the surety agreed thereto.<sup>13</sup> A writing which apparently amounts to an extension may be explained.<sup>14</sup> Where the surety claims discharge for noncompliance with tender and demand, evidence is admissible to show that security demanded was given to secure other debts as well as that on which the surety was liable.<sup>15</sup>

The surety may introduce any proper evidence to show nonliability<sup>16</sup> and mitigation of loss or damage.<sup>17</sup> Competent evidence is admissible on the part of the surety to show fraud, duress, or misrepresentations,<sup>18</sup> extension of time to the principal,<sup>19</sup> or an alteration of the contract,<sup>20</sup> or of any other matters of release or discharge.<sup>21</sup>

The whole or any part of the contract between

plaintiff and the principal may be offered by either plaintiff or defendant to establish a claim or defense.<sup>23</sup> Conversations and correspondence between the principal and creditor can be offered in evidence by the surety to show the circumstances under which the contract was made.<sup>22</sup>

Irrelevant evidence offered by either party is properly excluded.<sup>24</sup>

Admissions. Although an admission of one surety is inadmissible as evidence against a cosurety,<sup>25</sup> it is nevertheless admissible against the maker of it as a declaration against interest.<sup>26</sup>

§ 272. Weight and Sufficiency of Evidence

Every fact constituting a material element of a cause of action or defense in an action by a creditor or obligee against a surety must be established by satisfactory evidence or a preponderance of the evidence.

As in civil actions generally, every fact constituting a material element of a cause of action by a creditor or obligee against a surety must be established by satisfactory evidence or a preponderance of the evidence.<sup>27</sup> Plaintiff must establish

Account signed or acknowledged by principal

(1) In seller's action against buyer and sureties to recover balance due for goods sold buyer, where surety contract bound sureties to pay seller for all goods sold buyer and further provided that any statement made by buyer as to amount of indebtedness due at any time should be binding on sureties, one of sureties could not complain of admission in evidence of an account stated because it was signed by buyer alone, and not by surety.—Hoadley v. W. T. Rawleigh Co., 44 N.E.2d 231, 112 Ind.App. 563.

(2) Where petition in action on written surety agreement pleaded the agreement, and the account stated with the written acknowledgment and approval of the principal executed with the authority, knowledge, and approval of the defendant sureties, the account should have been admitted in evidence without further proof of its correctness and execution, since sureties might have denied such execution under oath, thus casting on plaintiff burden of proof of due execution.—W. by such evidence a breach or default of the principal<sup>28</sup> and loss or damage thereby.<sup>29</sup> The same facts which establish nonpayment as to the principal affect the sureties.<sup>30</sup> Where default consists of a crime, the rules in civil cases must be applied to ascertain from the preponderance of evidence the guilt of the principal,<sup>31</sup> and it is not necessary that proof be sufficient to sustain a conviction;<sup>32</sup> and, where the time of defalcation is in issue, the time charged in an information charging embezzlement, to which the principal pleaded guilty, is sufficient.<sup>33</sup> evidence of the amount due, not only against himself, but also against his sureties.<sup>48</sup> While the surety has the burden of proving an extension of time, as discussed supra § 270 b, the acceptance of interest in advance may be prima facie evidence of a contract to extend,<sup>49</sup> raising a presumption of fact.<sup>50</sup> In an action against sureties on a note, the note is prima facie evidence against them.<sup>51</sup> Possession of the bond by the obligee at the time a surety's name was erased, together with failure to proceed against that surety, is prima facie evidence of the obligee's consent to the erasure.<sup>52</sup> Where the bond of suretyship provides that a written statement by an employer, based on the accounts of the principal, "shall be prima facie evidence" of a loss sustained by the wrongful act of the principal, the employer makes out a prima facie case by offering such a statement in evidence.<sup>53</sup>

Extension of time

(1) Agreement of obligee to grant

obligor extension of time so as to release sureties can be implied from actions and circumstances attending transaction between parties.—O'Banion v. Willis, 129 So. 440, 14 La.App. 638.

(2) Mere acceptance of additional security for debt raises no implication of extension of time for payment such as releases surety.—Plummer v. Wilson, 185 A. 311, 322 Pa. 118.

Alteration of instrument

Testimony of sureties that they signed unaltered note, left with maker before delivery to payee, did not authorize inference that payee altered note.—Rankin v. Griffith, 139 S.E. 360, 37 Ga.App. 203.

Submission of issues to jury

(1) In general.—Granner v. Byam, supra.

(2) In suit against subcontractor and surety, evidence of oral contract for rolling subgrade not included in written contract and on which surety was not bound was erroneously submitted to jury without exempting surety from liability for breach of oral contract.—Inland Engineering & Construction Co. v. Maryland Casualty Co., 290 P. 367, 76 Utah 435.

56. La.—Hennen v. Wood, 16 La. Ann. 263.

The general rules relating to trials in civil actions ordinarily apply in actions against sureties,<sup>55</sup> and, in accordance with such rules, a surety may not complain of irregularity in the proceeding which does not affect him.<sup>56</sup> It has been held that the right to make the concluding argument rests with defendant surety,<sup>57</sup> although there is other authority to the effect that such right is with plaintiff creditor.<sup>58</sup>

§ 274. — Questions of Law and Fact

a. In general

b. Direction of verdict

a. In General

In actions by a creditor or obligee against a surety, questions of law are matters for the court to determine, but questions of fact are for the jury, where the evidence on such questions is in conflict.

General rules govern in determining what are questions of law and fact in actions by a creditor or obligee against a surety.<sup>59</sup> Since questions of law are matters for the court to determine,<sup>60</sup> it is for the court to pass on the construction of written instruments,<sup>61</sup> and to determine whether the evidence is sufficient to go to the jury.<sup>62</sup> On the oth-

59. Or.—Haddock Const. Co. v. Wilber, 169 P.2d 599, 178 Or. 659.

Increase of liability

Whether change in circumstances effected by parties to principal contract increases surety's liability, causing discharge, is question of fact.—Providence, Fall River & Newport Steamboat Co. v. Massachusetts Bay S. S. Corporation, D.C. Mass., 38 F.2d 674.

Legality of transaction may be a question of fact.—W. T. Rawleigh Co. v. Hammons, La.App., 24 So.2d 406.

er hand, questions of fact on which the evidence is conflicting are for the jury to determine.<sup>63</sup> On a trial without a jury, questions of fact are for the trial court.<sup>64</sup>

Generally, where it is doubtful from the testimony what relationship defendant assumed, that point should be left with the jury.<sup>65</sup> Accordingly, it is a question for the jury, on conflicting evidence, whether defendant whose name appeared on the face of a note was a surety only;<sup>66</sup> but, in an action on an instrument, where defendants did not admit that they were sureties on the obligation but admitted the execution of the obligation in which they were stated to be sureties, as set out in the complaint, their relationship on the obligation is presented to the court for determination as a matter of law.<sup>67</sup> The jury are not obliged to believe any witness, and are not bound to find that certain defendants are sureties when the instrument is silent as to that point.<sup>68</sup> Where statutes provide that the clerk shall certify, in recording the judgment, the relationship of defendants, it is not the duty of the jury to find which defendant is the principal and which is the surety.<sup>69</sup>

Where the evidence is conflicting, it is for the jury to decide whether there was a bone fide contract between the principal and the creditor;<sup>70</sup> whether a surety lacked capacity at the time he executed the contract,<sup>71</sup> or executed it under duress;<sup>72</sup> whether the surety's signature is genuine;<sup>73</sup> and whether a contract set out in the declaration was the one for the performance of which defendant gave bond.<sup>74</sup> Likewise, it is for the jury to pass on questions of fact relating to default,<sup>75</sup> such as whether a default relied on was within the terms of the contract,<sup>76</sup> or whether default was due to plaintiff's conduct;<sup>77</sup> and the jury should also, in case of conflicting evidence, determine whether plaintiff suffered loss by reason of the breach.<sup>78</sup>

and how much;<sup>79</sup> whether certain items of damage were the result of a breach of contract;<sup>80</sup> and what is a reasonable time for the surety to exercise an option to perform after default by the principal.<sup>81</sup>

The jury likewise should pass on the point of acceptance of work by the obligee as performance of the contract;<sup>82</sup> whether a return of collateral by plaintiff was negligence releasing the surety;<sup>83</sup> the amount of loss of security in the creditor's hands;<sup>84</sup> consent of the surety to nonobservance of conditions in the bond;<sup>85</sup> whether or not the creditor was notified to sue;<sup>86</sup> whether the surety was released by statements of plaintiff;<sup>87</sup> and whether a note was accepted as payment.<sup>88</sup> Whether or not one was an agent for one of the parties is a question of fact for the jury,<sup>89</sup> but the extent of his authority is for the court.<sup>90</sup>

Fraud. It is generally a question for the jury whether the surety was induced to become such by plaintiff's fraud,<sup>91</sup> or fraud of which he had knowledge,<sup>92</sup> or whether the surety was or was not misled by the misrepresentations.<sup>93</sup> It is for the jury to determine whether a failure of the obligee to inform the sureties of a shortage of the principal before execution indicates bad faith.<sup>94</sup>

Notice of default. Whether a surety was given notice of his principal's default as required by the terms of his obligation ordinarily is a question for the jury on conflicting evidence.<sup>95</sup> The question what constitutes a reasonable time for giving notice to the surety of any act or omission that might involve loss pursuant to a provision of the contract ordinarily is for the jury,<sup>96</sup> but whether a reasonable time has elapsed before the required notice was given is for the court to decide as a matter of law, where there is no conflict of testimony, and different conclusions cannot be drawn from the testimony.<sup>97</sup>

Extension of time for payment or performance. Whether an agreement for an extension of time has been made,<sup>98</sup> and, if made, what are its terms,<sup>99</sup> and whether the surety consented to the extension,<sup>1</sup> are questions properly to be submitted to the jury; but the effect of the extension, if proved, is for the court.<sup>2</sup>

Alteration of contract. The question whether or not there was an alteration of the principal obligation so as to discharge the surety is for the jury;<sup>3</sup>

Fact of alteration of written instru-

but the materiality of the alteration, where made, is for the court.<sup>4</sup> It is for the jury to determine whether a change in the contract was contemplated by the parties,<sup>5</sup> and the construction of the alteration agreement is for the court.<sup>6</sup>

b. Direction of Verdict

In actions by a creditor or obligee against a surety, the court may, in a proper case, direct a verdict for plaintiff or surety; but a directed verdict is improper when a question for the jury is presented.

In accordance with the rules governing the direction of a verdict in civil actions generally, in a proper case the court may direct a verdict for plaintiff<sup>7</sup> or surety;<sup>8</sup> but a directed verdict is improper when a question for the jury is presented,<sup>9</sup> as when the evidence is conflicting<sup>10</sup> or inconclusive,<sup>11</sup> or where the jury may draw inferences therefrom which favor the party against whom the verdict is to be directed.<sup>12</sup> Where the surety interposes no defense, it is improper to refuse to direct a verdict.<sup>13</sup> It is proper on directing verdict for the penal sum of the bond to direct an assessment of damages.<sup>14</sup>

§ 275. — Instructions

In an action by a creditor or obligee against a surety, the court should properly instruct the jury as to all the issues raised by the pleadings, including the measure of the surety's liability; and such instructions must be warranted by the evidence, and not be misleading or confusing.

The rules governing instructions in civil actions generally are applicable to actions by a creditor or obligee against a surety.<sup>15</sup> Subject to these rules, the jury should be properly instructed on the measure of the surety's liability.<sup>16</sup> General rules require that the court should properly instruct the jury as to all the issues raised by the pleadings;<sup>17</sup> and, where such facts are in issue, the jury should be correctly instructed as to execution and delivery of the bond,<sup>18</sup> extension of time,<sup>19</sup> agreements to release the surety,<sup>20</sup> material changes in the contract so as to release the surety,<sup>21</sup> and, like-ment as question of law or fact in action between parties to instrument see Alteration of Instruments § 94.

Ratification

Surety's testimony that everything contained in pleadings in receivership suit was true was affirmative admission, leaving jury no question on whether he ratified alteration in note by bringing suit.—People's Finance Co. of Dallas v. Sabanovich, Tex.Com.App., 26 S.W.2d 187.

Time of alteration

In an action on note, alterations apparent on face of note did not require a directed verdict for defendant sureties, where evidence was conflicting as to whether changes were made before or after signing of note.—Johnson v. T. M. Dover Mercantile Co., 261 S.W. 913, 164 Ark. 371.

Charge held not erroneous

In action on note against sureties, charges predicated verdict for sure-

wise, should be correctly instructed as to fraud,<sup>22</sup> failure to notify of default,<sup>23</sup> failure of the creditor to sue the principal before proceeding against the surety,<sup>24</sup> release of security by the creditor,<sup>25</sup> and destruction of security of the surety.<sup>26</sup>

Other general rules applied include those requiring the instructions not to be misleading or confusing<sup>27</sup> and that the instruction be warranted by the evidence.<sup>28</sup> A requested instruction not properly stating necessary matters may be refused<sup>29</sup> or may be modified by the court.<sup>30</sup> Where the court has substantially given the charge asked by a surety on his defense, the refusal to repeat the charge is no ground of complaint.<sup>31</sup> A charge which submits improper issues to the jury is bad.<sup>32</sup>

§ 276. — Verdict and Findings

The verdict or findings in an action by the creditor or obligee against a surety must be supported by the evidence; and the findings must not be inconsistent with each other or contrary to law.

General rules apply to the verdict or findings in an action by the creditor or obligee against a surety.<sup>33</sup> Thus, the verdict or findings must be supported by the evidence.<sup>34</sup> A verdict is not objectionable by reason of words which are mere surplusage.<sup>35</sup> Findings must not be inconsistent with each other<sup>36</sup> or contrary to law;<sup>37</sup> and, where evidence warrants a finding that one who was a surety afterward assumed liability as a principal, a general verdict based on such finding is not inconsistent with a special finding that he was originally a surety.<sup>38</sup>

Under a statute requiring the court to find, where requested, the relationship between defendants, such finding is justified on the introduction of testimony on the matter.<sup>39</sup> Where the contract stipulates that an extension shall not release the surety thereon, there need not be a finding that there was an extension.<sup>40</sup> Conclusions of law stated on findings of fact must be supported by the findings.<sup>41</sup> The time of default may properly be found by the court where the pleadings do not mention the date of the default.<sup>42</sup>

§ 277. Judgment

- a. In general
- b. Against whom rendered and designation of relationship
- c. Amount and provision for execution
- d. Amendment and vacation

a. In General

The judgment in an action by a creditor or obligee against a surety must conform to the pleadings, proof, and findings, and ordinarily a surety cannot be made liable by a judgment entered without any proceeding against him; but, under some statutes, judgment against a surety is authorized on judgment against the principal.

ties on material change or alteration were not erroneous because they did not limit verdict to changes set up in plea and because they did not define "material change," where, in oral charge, court mentioned material changes set up in plea and jury could not have been misled.—Shows v. Brunson, 159 So. 248, 229 Ala. 682.

Instruction held erroneous

An instruction which permits the jury to determine that an alteration, immaterial in law, is material should not be given.

Misrepresentation

In action against contract sureties asserting that they had been induced to sign contract by misrepresentations of material fact, omission of word "willfully" in charge referring to misrepresentation of material fact "made to deceive" was not error, notwithstanding language of statute was "made willfully to deceive."—W. 42. Or.—Bingham, etc., Co. v. National Brick, etc., Co., 133 P. 1187, 66 Or. 113.

General rules as to judgment in civil actions apply to judgments in actions by a creditor or obligee against a surety.<sup>43</sup> A surety cannot be made liable by a judgment entered without any proceeding against him,<sup>44</sup> and a judgment against a surety cannot be based on a verdict against the principal alone;<sup>45</sup> but, where the surety by his obligation has consented that a judgment be rendered against him, it may be entered without notice to him.<sup>46</sup> As in other cases, the judgment must conform to the pleadings and proof,<sup>47</sup> and must conform to the findings.<sup>48</sup> Statutes in some jurisdictions require judgment to be rendered against the principal where he is a resident, before final judgment may be entered against a surety.<sup>49</sup>

Summary judgment. Under some statutes, judgment against a surety is authorized on judgment against the principal;<sup>51</sup> but the remedy is allowed only in the cases expressly named in the statute,<sup>52</sup> and, in the absence of a statute allowing a summary judgment, no such recovery may be had against sureties on a common-law bond;<sup>53</sup> and a judgment based on a stipulation must comply with requirements for confessed judgment.<sup>54</sup>

b. Against Whom Rendered and Designation of Relationship

Where a principal and his surety are sued in the same action, judgment may be entered against both, and, in a proper case, judgment may then be rendered in favor of the surety against his principal or cosureties; a judgment against principal and surety need not designate that it is against one as surety except where it is so required by statute.

Where a principal and his surety are sued in the same action, judgment may be entered against both.<sup>55</sup> Subject to rules of general application as to joint defendants, where suit is brought against the principal and surety jointly on the same instrument, the judgment ordinarily must be against both or neither,<sup>56</sup> and rendered against both at the same time.<sup>57</sup> Where judgment is obtained against the principal alone, the surety is discharged;<sup>58</sup> but, in some circumstances, judgment may be rendered against the surety alone,<sup>59</sup> as where the principal becomes insolvent pending the suit,<sup>60</sup> or where the contract is several as well as joint.<sup>61</sup> Where the principal and surety may be sued together or separately, the judgment may be joint or several or joint and several.<sup>62</sup> Separate judgments may be rendered in favor of a principal and sureties jointly sued.<sup>63</sup> If, after the death of the principal, judgment is entered against him and his sureties, it will be stricken off as against him, but not as against his sureties.<sup>64</sup> Where the principal dies

after judgment is rendered, and before satisfaction, a scire facias may go against his administrators.<sup>65</sup>

Judgment in favor of surety against principal or cosurety. In a proper case, where a judgment is recovered by the creditor or obligee, judgment may be rendered in favor of the surety against his principal<sup>66</sup> or cosureties.<sup>67</sup> Where, however, separate judgments are obtained on a bond against cosureties, one of such sureties, on taking an assignment of the judgment against him, cannot enforce it as against the other surety, except as to his share of the sum due on the bond after it has been ascertained by an accounting.<sup>68</sup>

Designation of relationship. At common law, a judgment against principal and surety need not designate that it is against one as surety;<sup>69</sup> but under statute such designation may be requisite;<sup>70</sup> and it has been held, without reference to statute, that, where it appears from the face of a bond that one defendant is principal and the others sureties, it is proper to enter judgment against the former as principal and the others as sureties.<sup>71</sup> A statute of this kind, however, does not apply where the principal is not before the court;<sup>72</sup> or where judgment is by default against the surety;<sup>73</sup> or if evidence is not introduced to show the relationship;<sup>74</sup> or where all the defendants are principals, although they sustain the relationship of sureties among themselves.<sup>75</sup> Where the statutes merely permit the surety to have his relationship determined on request and judgment entered accordingly, the judgment need not designate the surety's relationship where no such application has been made.<sup>76</sup>

c. Amount and Provision for Execution

Ordinarily, judgment against principal and surety must be for the same amount against all the defendants, but the judgment must not be in excess of the penalty named in the bond. Under some statutes, the judgment should direct that the sheriff levy on the property of the principal first.

Judgment against principal and surety must be for the same amount against all the defendants,<sup>77</sup> unless sureties on a bond are bound in different amounts, in which case a separate judgment should be rendered against each for the full amount for which he is bound, although more than the amount due from the principal cannot be collected.<sup>78</sup> Judgment may not be rendered against the surety for an amount greater than that entered against the principal in a prior action.<sup>79</sup> Subject to the rules considered supra §§ 112-115 as to the amount recoverable, the judgment must not be in excess of the penalty named in the bond.<sup>80</sup> Where a surety bond was issued to individuals in a trade-name, and suit is brought by individual parties at interest, it is not necessary for the judgment to indicate the amount due to each individual.<sup>81</sup> Where, on an accounting between the creditor and surety, an amount is found due the latter, the surety may be entitled to interest on the amount due him from the date of filing of his cross-bill.<sup>82</sup>

Provision for execution. Under some statutes, a judgment should direct that the sheriff levy on the property of the principal first.<sup>83</sup> However, judgment need not be framed to subject the principal's property when the surety does not ask such relief.<sup>84</sup> A decree in equity should provide for first exhausting the estate of the principal,<sup>85</sup> unless he is utterly insolvent.<sup>86</sup> A statute authorizing the court to order that the property of the principal shall be exhausted before resort is had to the property of the surety does not authorize the court to order that the debt shall be paid by levy and sale of the property of one or more of the sureties.<sup>87</sup> Hence, where one of two sureties has paid one half of the amount of the liability, he is not entitled to an order directing the sheriff first to levy on, and sell the property of, his cosurety.<sup>88</sup>

d. Amendment and Vacation

In an action by a creditor or obligee against a surety, irregularities in the judgment are amendable. A judgment entered on an altered bond will be opened, even as to the one who made the alteration.

In an action by a creditor or obligee against a surety, irregularities in the judgment are amendable.<sup>89</sup>

Vacation or setting aside. A judgment entered on an altered bond will be opened, even as to the one who made the alteration.<sup>90</sup> Where a judgment against the principal and surety on a bond is canceled for fraud of the judgment creditor and principal, it is proper for the court to decree that the bond is void and that the surety is discharged from liability thereon.<sup>91</sup> Fraud practiced by one surety on another with respect to defending an action on a bond has been held not to authorize the vacating of a judgment for the obligee who had no notice of the alleged fraud.<sup>92</sup>

§ 278. Execution and Enforcement of Judgment

Where a joint judgment has been rendered against a principal and surety, the execution must issue against both, although the surety has been discharged by facts occurring after the judgment. Where there are two or more sureties, the judgment creditor is at liberty to levy execution on the property of any one of them.

Where a joint judgment has been rendered against a principal and surety, the execution must issue against both, although the surety has been discharged by facts occurring after the judgment,<sup>93</sup> but the court from which the process issues will take care that it is not used to work injustice.<sup>94</sup> The principal debtor may not compel the creditor to resort to personal property of the surety before resorting to the land of the principal;<sup>95</sup> nor will equity enjoin execution against the surety on the ground that the creditor is proceeding in equity to enforce a lien on the land of the principal for the same debt.<sup>96</sup> Although a levy on property of the principal more than sufficient to satisfy the debt has been made, nevertheless a levy may be made on the property of the surety where the property of the principal is not sold for want of bidders.<sup>97</sup> Failure of an execution to designate that some of the debtors are principals and others sureties as required by statute will not avail the principal.<sup>98</sup>

Sale. An execution sale will not be enjoined for mere irregularities in the notice.<sup>99</sup> As against an innocent purchaser from a purchaser on execution issued against the principal and cosureties, one of such cosureties cannot show that he has been released from liability by reason of the fact that the creditor had released his cosurety,<sup>1</sup> more particularly where he has taken no legal proceedings to have the execution declared invalid.<sup>2</sup>

Pending appeal or writ of error. Where the principal prosecutes an appeal or a writ of error, execution should not issue against the surety pending the proceedings in error,<sup>3</sup> and cannot issue where a supersedeas bond has been filed.<sup>4</sup>

As between cosureties. Where there are two or more sureties, the judgment creditor is at liberty to levy execution on the property of any one of them.<sup>5</sup> Equity will not direct the manner of execution against the property of sureties whose liabilities are equal, and they are in no sense sureties for each other.<sup>6</sup> Where cosureties are equally responsible, the fact that there is a decree establishing an attachment lien against the property of

§ 279. — Exhaustion of Property of Principal

- a. In general
- b. Under statutory provisions
- c. "Discussion"

a. In General

Where a judgment has been obtained against both the principal and the surety, the creditor may, at law, levy on the property either of the surety or of the principal, unless it is otherwise provided by statute; but in equity, the property of the principal ordinarily should be subjected first to the discharge of the obligation.

Where a judgment has been obtained against both the principal and the surety, the creditor, in the absence of a provision to the contrary in the statutes, may, at law, levy on the property either of the surety or of the principal.<sup>8</sup> In chancery, however, the property of the principal should be subjected first to the discharge of the obligation,<sup>9</sup> or, in event of the death of the principal, his heirs or devisees or legatees who have received assets by descent or will are made liable before resort can be had to the sureties,<sup>10</sup> unless to reach the property of the principal would involve great delay;<sup>11</sup> and in a proper case execution against the surety will be enjoined until after the property of the principal has been exhausted.<sup>12</sup> Where the judgment provides for execution on the surety's property only if the property of the principal is insufficient, the return of several executions nulla bona is prima facie sufficient to authorize the levy on the surety's property.<sup>13</sup>

Under statutes which render it necessary to exhaust the property of the principal before proceeding against that of the surety, the surety ordinarily is entitled to have execution issued first against his principal when the relationship is apparent in the judgment.

A number of statutory provisions render it necessary to exhaust the property of the principal before proceeding against that of the surety,<sup>14</sup> and the surety is entitled to have execution issued first against his principal.<sup>15</sup> Under such statutes, it has been held necessary to exhaust the property of the principal first when the relationship is apparent in the judgment,<sup>16</sup> but, where the judgment does not indicate that any of the defendants are sureties, the statutes do not apply.<sup>17</sup> Such statutes have been held not to apply where the principal is not sued,<sup>18</sup> or is insolvent,<sup>19</sup> or is dead,<sup>20</sup> although as to this there is also authority to the contrary.<sup>21</sup> Such statutes do not apply where the principal's property is in the custody of the court by its receiver<sup>22</sup> or where the judgment does not show the relationship and order of liability;<sup>23</sup> nor can a stranger, whose interests are adverse to the surety, claim the benefit of the statute for the latter.<sup>24</sup> Such statutes have been held to be merely directory,<sup>25</sup> and, if the officer disregards his instructions and resorts to the property of the surety first, the execution sale is nevertheless valid, but he is liable in damages to the surety.<sup>26</sup> The statute does not apply where both defendants are principals, although, as between them, the relationship of principal and surety exists.<sup>27</sup>

c. "Discussion"

In some jurisdictions, a surety may claim the benefit of "discussion" to compel the creditor to exhaust the property of the principal debtor before having recourse to the surety, or his property, where that is legally practicable.

27. Mont.—Brownlee v. Young, 63 P. 798, 25 Mont. 38.

In jurisdictions having the civil law, and under the statutes therein, a surety may claim the benefit of "discussion" to compel the creditor to exhaust the property of the principal debtor before having recourse to the surety, or his property,<sup>28</sup> where that is legally practicable.<sup>29</sup> This remedy, however, cannot be claimed in case of judicial security<sup>30</sup> or by a surety who becomes liable in solido,<sup>31</sup> and cannot be claimed as against a privileged creditor<sup>32</sup> or one who has a special hypothecation of the principal's property.<sup>33</sup> The remedy is not available where the principal's estate is not subject to execution,<sup>34</sup> or where the property is in litigation,<sup>35</sup> or has passed from the possession of the principal,<sup>36</sup> or the principal is not sued<sup>37</sup> or is insolvent.<sup>38</sup> The surety must point out the property to be resorted to,<sup>39</sup> and advance or tender the cost of the proceeding.<sup>40</sup>

§ 280. Appeal and Error

Sureties may, on appeal, show nonliability under a plea of their principal, which was sufficient to defeat a judgment against him.

General rules govern appeals in actions by a creditor against sureties.<sup>41</sup> Whether a judgment against a principal and surety may be reversed as to the principal and affirmed as to the surety, or vice versa, is discussed in Appeal and Error § 1921. Sureties may, on appeal, show nonliability under a plea of their principal, which was sufficient to defeat a judgment against him.<sup>42</sup> Although the surety's answer was insufficient, the judgment will not be reversed where the sufficiency of the answer was not challenged.<sup>43</sup> Where a verdict is found on a plea of non assumpsit, and the jury do not pass on a plea by the surety that he was discharged because plaintiff gave the principal time for payment without the consent of the surety, the judgment will not be reversed.<sup>44</sup> A statute which prevents a bonding company from doing business after non-payment of a judgment against it, where no appeal has been taken within a specified time, does not preclude an appeal after that time.<sup>45</sup>

§ 281. Costs

Generally, sureties may be liable for the costs of the proceedings against them, but a finding for defendants in an action against the principal and surety may entitle the surety to recover costs.

As a general rule, the sureties may be liable for the costs of the proceeding against them;<sup>46</sup> but a finding for defendants in an action against the principal and surety may entitle the surety to recover costs.<sup>47</sup> A judgment for costs is not erroneous as being against a married woman where she and her husband were joined as beneficiaries of the nominal plaintiff in his action against the sureties.<sup>48</sup> A statute providing for the recovery of attorney's fees, where the surety's refusal to pay requires action, is penal and must be strictly construed.<sup>49</sup>

The liability of the surety for costs and expenses incurred by the creditor or obligee in an endeavor to enforce the liability of the principal is considered supra § 114.

C. RECOURSE TO INDEMNITY OR SECURITY OF SURETY

§ 282. In General

As a general rule, where a surety receives security as indemnity from his principal, the creditor is entitled to the benefit thereof, or, if security is given to protect sureties liable for different debts, it should be apportioned among the several creditors; but indemnity or security given by a stranger or third person to the transaction to the surety is not available to the creditor.

As a general rule, where a surety receives security as indemnity from his principal, the creditor is entitled to the benefit thereof.<sup>50</sup> Decisions, however, recognize this rule only as far as the securities are given for the better protection or payment of the debt,<sup>51</sup> and hold that the creditor has no right to securities given the surety for his own personal indemnity<sup>52</sup> until the surety has been damnified<sup>53</sup> or both principal and surety are insolvent,<sup>54</sup> although, as to this, the contrary has also been held.<sup>55</sup> In any case, the giving of securities is regarded, in equity, as a trust for the better security of the debt,<sup>56</sup> available to the creditor, even though he was ignorant of it at the time it was given,<sup>57</sup> and enforceable by anyone entitled to enforce the contract made by the surety;<sup>58</sup> and it is immaterial whether the surety received it at the time he incurred liability, or at a later date.<sup>59</sup> Since the right of subrogation is an equitable one, growing out of the relationship arising through contract, it does not exist where the contract was not executed by the principal,<sup>60</sup> or where the supposed surety is not in fact bound.<sup>61</sup>

Security also for debt of principal to surety. Some conflict exists as to the rights of the creditor where the property is given by the principal to secure a debt due by the principal to the surety as well as to indemnify the surety for the debt due the creditor. Some courts hold that the creditor is entitled to all of the security if necessary to satisfy his claim before the security is applied to a debt existing between the principal and surety,<sup>62</sup> while other courts hold that the surety is entitled to indemnify himself in full as to his individual claims before the creditor is entitled to anything,<sup>63</sup> especially where the surety has transferred the security;<sup>64</sup> and still others hold that the security will be apportioned pro rata.<sup>65</sup>

Security given to protect sureties liable for different debts should be apportioned among the several creditors.<sup>66</sup>

Where surety mortgaged his own property to the creditor to secure payment, and afterward took a mortgage of property of the principal as indemnity, the creditors may subject either mortgaged properties to payment of their debt, but cannot appropriate both.<sup>67</sup> In such cases, the surety is entitled to indemnify himself out of the mortgage given him before the creditor can demand the property of the principal in his hands.<sup>68</sup>

A written promise to indemnify the surety is not a promise for the benefit of the creditor or obligee on which he may recover.<sup>69</sup>

Indemnity or security given by a stranger or third person to the transaction to the surety is not available to the creditor,<sup>70</sup> although such third person is a partner of the principal;<sup>71</sup> and the right of recourse does not extend to security given by co-sureties to each other<sup>72</sup> or by a surety to a supplemental surety.<sup>73</sup> Likewise, the person who indemnified the surety may not be held liable by the creditor,<sup>74</sup> although if the securities given by a third person or stranger are for payment of the debt they can be reached;<sup>75</sup> and it has been held that a third person who lent money to the principal to deposit with the surety as indemnity cannot retake it.<sup>76</sup>

Assignment of security to creditor. Where the surety is willing, he may at any time assign to the creditor any property of the principal in his hands,<sup>77</sup> provided he holds it as indemnity for the debt owing to such creditor.<sup>78</sup> The effect is the same as though a decree in chancery had been made directing such assignment.<sup>79</sup> The substitution of the creditor in place of the surety as to property in the hands of the latter does not give the creditor any rights greater than the surety had.<sup>80</sup> Where a surety assigns a mortgage given him for his indemnity to the creditor, taking from him a discharge from liability, the mortgage is no longer in force.<sup>81</sup>

In California

(1) It has been held that an undertaking to pay surety all loss which he might sustain or for which he might become liable by having executed bond was not one for benefit of creditor of principal in bond executed by surety on which such creditor might sue.—Taylor v. De Camp, 23 P.2d 61, 132 Cal.App. 640.

(2) It has also been held, however, that the obligee of the surety bond was entitled to sue a third person on his contract to indemnify the surety from all loss sustained on the bond.—Union Oil Co. of California v. Pacific Surety Co., 187 P. 14, 182 Cal. 69.

(3) So, the state was held entitled to recover on indemnity agreement executed to surety company, which had executed bail bond providing that indemnitors would indemnify and save surety harmless from all liability, where surety company became insolvent, and summary judgment against company remained wholly unpaid.—Los Angeles County v. Leach, 59 P.2d 1045, 15 Cal.App.2d 721.

Where building corporation deposited sum with insurer as collateral for damages arising from issuance of title policy in conformance with corporation's obligation to protect mortgagee against defect in title to realty, and insurer agreed to turn over collateral to mortgagee unless mortgagee should request issuance of policy, mortgagee although he requested issuance of policy, was not precluded from asserting his right to have collateral handed over to him for his own protection, where insurer's liability ceased because of liquidation.—In re Lawyers Title & Guaranty Co., 50 N.Y.S.2d 257, 183 Misc. 294.

§ 283. Property to Which Right Extends

Mortgage to surety. As a general rule, the right of the creditor to avail himself of security furnished the surety extends, in a proper case, to mortgages of land<sup>92</sup> or of chattels.<sup>93</sup> Such right rests according to one view primarily on whether the mortgage was executed for the security of the debt as well as for the ultimate protection of the surety indorser.<sup>94</sup> Where the mortgage is for the security of the debt, the creditor has an interest in it and becomes a cestui que trust.<sup>95</sup> On the other hand, where the security is purely personal for the purpose of indemnifying the surety, a trust is not attached to it for the creditor and there is no action or remedy to which the creditor can be substituted until the surety has been damnified.<sup>96</sup> According to another view, the creditor has an equitable claim to the security whether the condition is that the mortgagor shall pay the debt or whether it merely stipulates that he shall indemnify the surety.<sup>97</sup>

Mortgages given by cosureties, each to the other as security to indemnify him against any claim against his proportion assumed, are not in equity securities for the payment of the principal debt which inure to the benefit of creditors on the principle of subrogation.<sup>98</sup> So, where joint indorsers of certain notes enter into an agreement whereby they are to share equally in the payment of any amounts unpaid by the maker and severally execute mortgages to a trustee to secure the performance of this agreement, the holders of the notes are not entitled to be subrogated to the rights of the indorsers in the mortgages.<sup>99</sup> Where, however, a mortgage was given by a surety to his cosurety, as security against the debt of the creditor, the mortgagee has been held in equity to be a trustee for the creditor.<sup>1</sup>

When a creditor has recourse to a mortgage which has been given as security, the creditor is entitled to the priority which such mortgage may have over claims held by other creditors of the principal;<sup>2</sup> nor is the right to the benefit of a mortgage lost by the fact that the surety has foreclosed a mortgage held by him;<sup>3</sup> but, if the creditor has no interest in the proceeds thereof, he cannot vacate a sale under foreclosure by the surety.<sup>4</sup>

Reason for rule

Since the design of such a mortgage is merely to protect the sureties, that protection is given by the creditor's discharge, and the condition of the mortgage is fulfilled.—Sumner v. Bacheider, supra.

§ 284. Enforcement and Loss of Right

The creditor need not take any steps to enforce the debt or first obtain a judgment against the principal in order to avail himself of the right of subrogation; but, if the surety could not have enforced the security except on the happening of a contingency, the creditor cannot enforce it unless the contingency arises.

In order to avail himself of the right of subrogation, it is not necessary that the creditor take any steps to enforce the debt;<sup>5</sup> nor is it necessary that he have first obtained a judgment against the principal.<sup>6</sup> Where the creditor has a right of recourse to securities in the hands of a surety, his right is not lost by the fact that he cannot enforce any personal liability by reason of the insolvency of either or both principal and surety,<sup>7</sup> or because the surety has been discharged in bankruptcy,<sup>8</sup> or although, the debt being a joint one, on the death of the surety his estate cannot be held;<sup>9</sup> and although ordinarily a discharge of the principal by the creditor will release the surety, as discussed supra § 223, it has been held that such a release will not deprive the creditor of his right of recourse to securities in the hands of the surety.<sup>10</sup> An extension of time will not bar recourse to the security, although the personal liability cannot be enforced.<sup>11</sup> Under some circumstances, however, the creditor's right of recourse to the security may be waived by action taken by him.<sup>12</sup>

The creditor cannot enforce directly for his benefit a trust created for the benefit of the surety;<sup>13</sup> but the proper procedure is to file a bill asking for subrogation; and, as a part of the relief granted, the property can then be applied in payment of the debt.<sup>14</sup> Should the creditor, for any reason, fail in establishing his rights to subrogation, he is not deprived from afterward attaching any property of the principal in the hands of the surety.<sup>15</sup> Where the surety could not have enforced the security except on the happening of a contingency, the creditor cannot enforce it unless the contingency arises.<sup>16</sup>

§ 285. Transfer or Release by Surety

Where the creditor has a right of recourse to property of the principal in the hands of the surety, his rights are superior to claims of others against the surety and cannot be altered or impaired by the surety; but, where no right has yet accrued to the creditor, the surety may in good faith release the security.

Where the creditor has a right of recourse to property of the principal in the hands of the surety, his rights are superior to claims of others against the surety,<sup>17</sup> and cannot be altered or impaired by the surety;<sup>18</sup> and the surety may not divert the security to other objects.<sup>19</sup> The equitable lien of the creditor attaches as against an assignee<sup>20</sup> or a pledgee,<sup>21</sup> although it has been held otherwise when the assignee had no notice, express or constructive, of the creditor's equity.<sup>22</sup> If the surety unjustly releases the security, the right of the creditor therein is not defeated.<sup>23</sup> Where a surety receives a mortgage as security, and afterward acquires title to the property, the right of the creditor is not affected.<sup>24</sup> Where, however, no right has yet accrued to the creditor, the surety may in good faith release the security.<sup>25</sup> Thus, if, before the creditor has taken steps to subject the security to his claim, the surety, in good faith, releases it to the principal, the creditor may not complain.<sup>26</sup>

VIII. RIGHTS AND REMEDIES OF SURETY

A. AS TO CREDITOR OR OBLIGEE

§ 286. In General

- a. General rules
- b. Performance or completion of contract by surety

a. General Rules

A surety for the performance of a contract has a material interest in the rights and remedies to which the creditor is entitled thereunder. Apart from statutory remedies, a surety's proper remedy at law to protect his rights ordinarily is to pay the debt and pursue the principal for reimbursement.

A surety for the performance of a contract has a material interest in the rights and remedies to which the creditor is entitled under the contract;<sup>27</sup> but such a surety acquires an interest in an earlier contract between the principal and obligee, to which the surety is not a party, only where it touches on the liability of the surety;<sup>28</sup> and only where such liability is touched on in connection with something material can the surety avail himself of a variance between the contract and the bond as a defense to an action on the bond.<sup>29</sup>

A surety's rights are zealously guarded both at law and in equity.<sup>30</sup> The rights which an accommodation surety has under the law and by which his burdens are lightened are not to be ousted by the mere implications of his contract of suretyship.<sup>31</sup>

A surety has the rights accorded him by statute.<sup>32</sup>

As to the protection of his rights, the surety's proper remedy at law ordinarily is to pay the debt and pursue the principal for reimbursement,<sup>33</sup> or, where a remedy is provided by statute, to proceed under the statute.<sup>34</sup> In equity, however, his remedy is not necessarily confined, as at law, to obtaining indemnity after payment of the debt,<sup>35</sup> and, where protection can be afforded him without substantial injury to the creditor, a court of equity may award that relief without the debt being first paid by the surety.<sup>36</sup>

Various particular rights of the surety as against the creditor or obligee have been treated elsewhere in this title, such as his right to terminate the Subrogation of a surety to the rights of the creditor is discussed in the C.J.S. title Subrogation §§ 47-56, also 60 C.J. p 740 note 5-p 770 note 98; the rights of a surety on a highway contractor's bond are discussed in Highways § 210 c (4).

Assertion of rights after judgment. One who sustains the relationship of surety on a debt may assert his rights as such even after judgment has been entered against him on such debt.<sup>37</sup>

Right in debt of creditor to principal. A surety has an interest in the sum owed by a creditor to a bankrupt principal, which interest the surety may assert in his own right, and not merely through the principal.<sup>38</sup>

Right in property pledged or note. A surety has not, by virtue of the contract of suretyship alone, any right, title, or interest in property which his principal has pledged to a creditor as security for a debt.<sup>39</sup> A surety on a note has no right to demand the delivery thereof to him on its being paid by the principal debtor.<sup>40</sup>

Lien on funds derived from contract covered.

A corporate surety company for hire, surety on a construction bond, ordinarily does not have an equitable lien on the funds derived from the contract covered by such bond.<sup>41</sup>

A surety securing the payment of rent on the lessee's default has no greater rights in the premises than the lessee,<sup>42</sup> and has no right to demand, as a condition to the discharge of the obligation assumed by him, that he be permitted to sublet the premises free from the restrictions contained in the lease.<sup>43</sup>

b. Performance or Completion of Contract by Surety

A surety for the performance of a contract may, on the principal's default, perform the contract himself; a surety assuming a defaulted building contract is entitled to the benefits thereof from the time of the default.

As a general rule, a surety for the performance of a contract may, on default of his principal, perform the contract himself.<sup>44</sup> So, where the bond so provides, the surety may, on default by the builder, elect to complete the contract and to stand on the terms of the bond<sup>45</sup> or voluntarily to pay any damages resulting from the builder's default;<sup>46</sup> and where he thus assumes the defaulted contract he is entitled to the benefits of the contract from the time of the builder's default,<sup>47</sup> together with any sum which may be due the builder at the time the default is declared,<sup>48</sup> less deductions for defects in the work and material furnished by the builder.<sup>49</sup> As discussed supra § 90, the surety also becomes subject to all of the builder's liabilities. The completion of the building contract by a defaulting contractor's surety effects an assignment of the contract to the surety.<sup>50</sup> The surety is entitled to no lien for his work where the contractor is not entitled to one by reason of a failure to record the contract.<sup>51</sup>

Where the work is carried out by a person liable to indemnify the surety of a subcontractor after the latter's default, the contractor's bond is not discharged.<sup>52</sup>

§ 287. Recourse to, and Exhaustion of, Remedy against Principal

- a. At law
- b. In equity
- c. Under statutes

a. At Law

At law, unless permitted by statute, a surety generally cannot require the creditor, before proceeding against the surety, to resort to, and exhaust his remedies against, the principal.

There is a direct conflict between the rules existing at common law and in equity as to the right of a surety to require the creditor or obligee to proceed first against the principal debtor or the security furnished by the principal.<sup>53</sup> In accordance with the rule that, in the absence of statute or agreement otherwise, a surety is primarily liable, discussed supra § 87, and with the rule that his proper remedy is to pay the debt and pursue the principal for reimbursement, discussed supra § 286 a, the surety cannot at law, unless permitted by statute, and in the absence of any agreement limiting the application of the security,<sup>54</sup> require the creditor or obligee, before proceeding against the surety, to resort to, and exhaust his remedies against, the principal,<sup>55</sup> or exhaust his remedies

Parties bound unconditionally and in solido

On the accrual of a cause of action against a principal and surety who have bound themselves unconditionally and in solido, the surety is without right in law to force the creditor to exhaust all of his remedies against the principal before suing the surety.—Brock v. First State Bank & Trust Co., 175 So. 569, 187 La. 766.

Effect of contractual provision

Since the text rule is true with or without a provision to that effect in the contract, the creditor acquires nothing by such a provision and the surety surrenders nothing.—Overstreet v. W. T. Rawleigh Co., 43 S.E. 2d 774, 75 Ga.App. 483.

Pursuit of remedy given by bond

Fact that one suing on bond has not chosen to pursue principal first is no answer or defense if he is following remedy given by bond.—Downer v. U. S. Fidelity & Guaranty Co. of Maryland, C.C.A.Pa., 46 F.2d 733.

against his receiver,<sup>56</sup> or his estate, in case of his death,<sup>57</sup> particularly where both principal and surety are equally bound,<sup>58</sup> or the surety's liability is on a contract and absolute promise, depending on no such condition expressed in the contract or implied by law.<sup>59</sup>

Where a surety dies, the cause of action survives against his personal representatives, as discussed in Abatement and Revival § 137 a, and the creditor may proceed against such representatives without exhausting his remedies against the principal and living cosurety.<sup>60</sup>

Discussion, in the civil law, cannot be demanded by the surety before judgment, but only under execution;<sup>61</sup> and a plea of discussion need not be examined on its merits if it does not comply with statutory requirements.<sup>62</sup>

b. In Equity

A court of equity, before the surety has paid the debt, and for good cause shown, may, at the instance of the surety and for his protection, require the creditor or obligee first to proceed against the principal debtor.

A court of equity, before the surety has paid the debt, and for good cause shown, may, at the instance of the surety and for his protection, require the creditor or obligee first to proceed against the principal debtor,<sup>63</sup> or against his estate, if he is deceased,<sup>64</sup> unless an adequate remedy at law is provided by statute, as discussed infra subdivision c of this section. However, peculiar circumstances rendering such interference necessary and proper must exist,<sup>65</sup> and ordinarily the character of complainant as surety must appear on the face of the instrument.<sup>66</sup> It has been held that this equity assistance cannot be invoked where it appears that the principal is insolvent<sup>67</sup> or before the debt is due.<sup>68</sup>

On the other hand, it has also been held that a court of chancery will not compel a creditor to proceed against the principal debtor before he resorts to the surety,<sup>69</sup> and that a surety is not entitled in equity to stay the proceedings on an execution against himself until the property of the principal is exhausted.<sup>70</sup>

Where all the parties are before the court and their liabilities ascertained, a decree may be made in the first instance against the principal, where this can be done without delay or injury to the creditor;<sup>71</sup> but it has been doubted whether a creditor with the surety's money or its equivalent in his hands will be compelled, without resorting thereto, first to exhaust his remedies against the principal.<sup>72</sup>

Indemnity to creditor. Before the surety is entitled to such assistance from a court of equity, he must first offer to indemnify the creditor in his

Judgment requiring credit

Surety on replevin bond

It has been held in equity that in the absence of statute prescribing a different procedure a surety, against whom judgment on a replevin bond has been rendered cannot compel the creditor first to proceed against the property of his principal even though the principal has sufficient property to satisfy the judgment.—*Walker v. proceedings against the principal<sup>73</sup> and to pay whatever the principal fails to pay;<sup>74</sup> or he may be ordered by the court to give such indemnity.<sup>75</sup>

c. Under Statutes

In situations coming within statutes so providing, a surety may require the creditor, before proceeding against him, to proceed first against the principal, or to proceed against the principal at the same time.

In some jurisdictions the rights and remedies of the surety as against the creditor, with respect to prior recourse to, and exhaustion of, remedy against the principal, and as embodied in statutes, are, in many respects, the same rights as were enforced by equity prior to the statutes,<sup>76</sup> and are based on the implied obligation of the principal to save the surety harmless.<sup>77</sup> As in equity, as discussed supra subdivision b of this section, the surety, in cases within the statute, may require the creditor, before proceeding against him, to proceed first against the principal debtor,<sup>78</sup> or to proceed against the principal at the same time,<sup>79</sup> or to pursue any other remedy in his power.<sup>80</sup> Where such a statute is of a special nature, the remedy applies only in case of such sureties as come within the terms of the statute.<sup>81</sup> Where such a statutory remedy is applicable, the surety cannot sue in equity to compel the creditor to proceed against the principal, since an adequate remedy at law is afforded by the statute.<sup>82</sup>

Provision for direct action against surety. The rule that a judgment cannot be rendered against the surety until it has been judicially determined that the person making the claim has a valid one against the principal and has taken the necessary steps to enforce the payment thereof has no application to a statutory bond where the legislature has provided that a direct action may be brought against the surety.<sup>83</sup>

Adjustment of rights. A statute, permitting a surety, in an action against him and his principal, to have the rights between them adjusted without affecting the proceedings of plaintiff is not a limitation of the surety's rights as they existed before,<sup>84</sup> but is an additional and more complete remedy than that which existed under the common law.<sup>85</sup> Such statutory remedy is not available to an alleged surety in a suit by a creditor as to whom he is in fact a principal obligor.<sup>86</sup>

§ 288. Recourse to, and Exhaustion of, Other Property or Securities

- a. At law
- b. In equity
- c. Under statutes

a. At Law

Except where the suretyship contract provides otherwise, at common law a creditor ordinarily cannot be required, before proceeding against the surety, to resort to and exhaust collateral security held by him for payment of the indebtedness, or to proceed against other property of the principal which is subject to the satisfaction of the debt, or to avail himself of other means of enforcement; nor can he be compelled to realize first on any particular one of several securities.

At common law the creditor or obligee ordinarily cannot be required, before proceeding against the surety, to resort to and exhaust collateral security

Execution of joint judgment

Statute requiring, in action against principal and surety, execution to be levied first on principal's property in county, contemplates joint judgment enforceable by execution against both principal and surety; in action on note not secured by lien, against administrator and comaker, a surety, judgment directing postponement of execution against surety until estate should be fully administered and sums realized therefrom received and credited on the judgment was held erroneous, since, as against administrator, judgment is not capable of execution, but only in due course of administration.—Marine Banking & Trust Co. v. held by him for the payment of the indebtedness,<sup>87</sup> especially where the securities are claimed by other persons, who are not in court,<sup>88</sup> nor can he be required to realize first on any particular one of several securities;<sup>89</sup> and the fact that the creditor holds collateral security cannot be asserted by the surety as a defense to an action against him by the creditor on the obligation.<sup>90</sup> If the creditor or obligee has received collateral security from the principal, without any stipulation that it is to be held for any particular debt,<sup>91</sup> or holds any property of the principal,<sup>92</sup> the creditor or obligee can apply it to debts for which the surety is not liable. In accordance with these rules, the creditor cannot be compelled first to enforce a mortgage which he holds on the principal's property as security for the indebtedness.<sup>93</sup>

The creditor, however, may be required to proceed against the collateral first, where the suretyship contract or undertaking provides for such application of the funds or securities,<sup>94</sup> or where,

under the terms of the bond, a foreclosure of the security given by the principal is a condition precedent to a right of recovery against the surety;<sup>95</sup> and the surety can control the application of payments where payment is made from the proceeds of collateral given to secure the particular debt guaranteed by the surety.<sup>96</sup>

Other property or means of enforcement. The creditor cannot be required to proceed against and apply other property of the principal which is subject to the satisfaction of the indebtedness<sup>97</sup> or to avail himself of other means of enforcement<sup>98</sup> before proceeding against the surety, except that where it is stipulated that the surety shall be liable for a deficiency only after the application, on the indebtedness, of security held by the creditor, he cannot be held liable if the conditions have not been fulfilled.<sup>99</sup> For example, a surety cannot compel the creditor or obligee to attach the property of the principal before proceeding against the surety,<sup>1</sup> especially where no legal grounds for at-

(1) A creditor holding collateral security for payment of several loans may apply proceeds thereof in manner most beneficial to him; neither principal debtor nor his surety has power to direct such creditor as to manner in which collateral shall be applied.—Killoren v. Security held by surety. The creditor or obligee cannot be required to take and apply security held by the surety for his indemnity<sup>6</sup> or to wait until the surety realizes on it.<sup>7</sup>

Effect of contract. Where by contract between the debtor and creditor, of which the surety is chargeable with notice, it is stipulated that payments from the proceeds of collateral may, at the creditor's election, be first applied to payment of that portion of the debt not guaranteed by the surety, the latter has no right to compel pro rata application to the portion of the debt guaranteed by him.<sup>8</sup>

b. In Equity

Where there is danger of hardship to the surety, and the rights of the creditor and third persons will not be substantially injured by such procedure, equity, at the surety's instance, may require the creditor to resort to property of the principal which is subject to the indebtedness, or to collateral security in his hands, before resorting to the surety or any security furnished by him, provided the surety offers to indemnify the creditor and pay any resulting deficiency.

In equity a surety is entitled to the benefit of all securities which the creditor obtains against the principal,<sup>9</sup> and this is so where the principal has become insolvent,<sup>10</sup> whether or not the debt has been paid by the surety.<sup>11</sup> It has been broadly declared that the surety is not bound to pay anything that the principal's property will pay;<sup>12</sup> and where there is danger of hardship to the surety, and it can be done without substantial injury or prejudice to the creditor or obligee, a court of equity, at the instance of the surety, may require the creditor or obligee to resort to the property of the principal debtor which is subject to the indebtedness,<sup>13</sup> or to any collateral security of the principal debtor in the hands of the creditor or obligee,<sup>14</sup> before resorting to the surety or to any security furnished by him,<sup>15</sup> provided the security furnished by the principal is as available as that furnished by the surety<sup>16</sup> and that procedure does not cause any injury to the rights of third persons,<sup>17</sup> and provided he offers to indemnify the creditor<sup>18</sup> and to pay any deficiency that may result,<sup>19</sup> and provided the terms of the contract do not prevent such action in equity.<sup>20</sup>

20. U.S.—U. S. Fidelity & Guaranty

This right of the surety is superior to a lien subsequently acquired on the principal's property.<sup>21</sup> The creditor, however, is not required to resort to property which is not of any value by reason of prior liens;<sup>22</sup> nor is he required to resort to other property or security where he would be unduly inconvenienced and delayed in the collection of his debt.<sup>23</sup>

Waiver or loss of surety's rights. The surety does not lose his rights in this respect merely because the property to which he wishes the creditor to resort has been levied on<sup>24</sup> or sold<sup>25</sup> unless there was collusion between the principal and surety in making the sale;<sup>26</sup> nor is the right lost because the surety has consented to an exchange of securities.<sup>27</sup>

Stay of proceedings. If proceedings already have been begun against the surety by the creditor or obligee, the surety is entitled to have them stayed until the collateral security can be enforced.<sup>28</sup>

c. Under Statutes

Under some statutes a creditor may be required to resort to the principal's property before proceeding against the surety.

In some jurisdictions the equity rule discussed supra subdivision b of this section in many respects is now embodied in statutes under which the creditor may be required to resort to the property of the principal before proceeding against the surety.<sup>29</sup>

Under a statute permitting any one or more of several defendants to have the question of suretyship determined, a defendant, in an action on a note and to foreclose a mortgage securing it, may, by cross complaint, show that he is a surety, and ask that the interest of the principal in the land covered by the mortgage be sold before the property of the cross complainant is resorted to.<sup>30</sup>

Under a statute providing that whenever property is hypothecated with the property of a principal the surety is entitled to have the property of the principal first applied to the discharge of the obligation, the creditor may not apply property of the principal to other debts, to the detriment of the surety.<sup>31</sup>

§ 289. As to Preservation, Collection, and Application of Collateral

A surety has a beneficial right or interest in the collateral held by the creditor for the principal debt; the creditor must exercise good faith toward the surety in preserving, applying, or disposing of the security or its proceeds, not only for the creditor's security, but for the surety's indemnity.

The surety, by his very character and relationship of surety, has a beneficial right or interest in the collateral held by the creditor for the principal debt,<sup>32</sup> whether the security is obtained at the time of, or subsequent to, the surety's assumption of lia-

Belief as to obligee's dealing with security

Surety was entitled to benefit of security held by obligee of surety bond, and surety was entitled to believe that obligee would deal with its security as do holders of security generally, and as expressly provided in contract between principal and obligee.—Hochevar v. Maryland Casualty Co., C.C.A.Ohio, 114 F.2d 948.

bility,<sup>33</sup> or with or without his knowledge.<sup>34</sup> The creditor is regarded as a trustee of the security,<sup>35</sup> and, as such, must exercise good faith toward the surety in his preservation, disposition, or application of the security or its proceeds, not only for the creditor's security, but also for the surety's indemnity.<sup>36</sup>

This duty of the creditor, however, ordinarily is not a positive duty,<sup>37</sup> and he is not liable to the surety for a loss resulting from mere passivity,<sup>38</sup> but only where he has done some affirmative act which impairs or releases the security.<sup>39</sup> If the creditor fails to collect and apply certain property or security to the payment of the principal's indebtedness, as he has agreed to do, the surety has a right of action against him therefor,<sup>40</sup> and is entitled to full relief if the collateral is sufficient to satisfy the debt,<sup>41</sup> but if it is not sufficient he is entitled only to pro tanto relief.<sup>42</sup> The creditor's refusal to furnish the surety a statement of a sale of the collateral will not warrant an inference that the creditor has omitted to perform his duty as to the collections.<sup>43</sup>

Demand of sale. Where the agreement gives the creditor the right to sell the collateral at any time after the maturity of the indebtedness, and apply the proceeds to its payment, the surety may, at any time after maturity, demand such sale,<sup>44</sup> and if he fails to make such demand he may not complain of the creditor's failure to sell,<sup>45</sup> and may not contend that he is liable only for any deficit which might arise after the exhaustion of the collateral.<sup>46</sup>

tional security, the mortgagor's surety has no right of action against the mortgagee creditor for a failure to take out insurance on the property unless he has agreed to do so.<sup>47</sup>

Securities given to surety for his indemnity may be resorted to by the creditor, as discussed supra § 282, and where such security is not sufficient to cover the entire debt for which the surety is liable, if the surety has paid part of the debt, the proceeds of the security should be applied to the balance due before the surety is entitled to anything.<sup>48</sup>

§ 290. — Application of Proceeds

A surety has a right to have the proceeds of the securities applied to the indebtedness secured, for which he became surety, in preference to any other indebtedness, unless the contract provides for application to other indebtedness.

The surety has a right to have the proceeds of the securities held by the creditor applied to the indebtedness secured, for which he became surety,<sup>49</sup> in preference to any other indebtedness,<sup>50</sup> unless provision is made in the contract for application to other indebtedness;<sup>51</sup> and he may sue in equity to compel the creditor to collect collateral or funds in exoneration of the suretyship.<sup>52</sup> If the creditor misapplies or releases the security, the surety may be entitled to a discharge from liability, as discussed supra §§ 197-207, and he may sue in equity to compel a release from his liability, as considered infra § 299 b, or he may avail himself of such misapplication or release as a defense to an action at law against him on the principal obligation.<sup>53</sup>

Effect of assignment. Where, on assignment of the principal contract, the assignee executes a bond for the purpose of protecting the principal and his surety from liability, any right of the surety as to the application of a deposit made by the principal passes against the assignee.<sup>54</sup>

§ 291. — Accounting

A surety is entitled, in equity, to an accounting of security received by the creditor, but must show that the property or security unaccounted for was subject to the payment of the principal's indebtedness.

The surety is entitled, in equity, to an accounting of security received by the creditor or obligee,<sup>55</sup> or by his assignee,<sup>56</sup> especially where the creditor has converted such collateral to his own use.<sup>57</sup> However, in order to require such accounting, the surety must show that the property or security unaccounted for was subject to the payment of the principal's indebtedness.<sup>58</sup>

§ 292. Right to Surrender of Security; Contribution

A surety paying the principal debt or performing the principal obligation is entitled to a surrender to him of the collateral pledged for such debt or obligation; but, where the principal pays the debt, the surety has no right to receive the collateral from the creditor. A surety paying a note and receiving it from the payee with the latter's indorsement thereon is not entitled to contribution from the payee.

Where the surety pays the principal debt or performs the principal obligation, he is entitled to a surrender to him by the creditor of the collateral pledged for such debt or obligation<sup>59</sup> to the extent of enforcing it against the principal for reimbursement;<sup>60</sup> but, where the principal has himself paid the debt, the surety has no right to receive the collateral from the creditor.<sup>61</sup>

Under a statutory provision entitling the surety to tender to the creditor the amount of the debt and demand the securities therefor to be delivered up to him to be enforced against the principal or cosureties, the surety is entitled, on such tender, to a surrender only of securities which were deposited for the particular debt for which he is surety,<sup>62</sup> and therefore is not entitled to a surrender of securities which were deposited for the principal debt and also for other indebtedness.<sup>63</sup>

It is too late to tender payment and demand surrender of the collateral after a judgment has been entered and the collateral sold thereunder.<sup>64</sup>

A surety paying a note and receiving it from the payee with the latter's indorsement thereon is not entitled to contribution from the payee.<sup>65</sup> A general insurance carrier's surety on a supersedeas appeal bond can assert any defense to a special insurance carrier's claim for contribution for the amount paid on a joint and several judgment against both carriers as coinsurers which the general carrier could have asserted.<sup>66</sup> Contribution between cosureties is discussed infra §§ 352-371.

can recover the deposit on termination of the lease in the first year of the term.<sup>67</sup>

§ 293. Recovery of Payments

In some circumstances a surety may recover back a payment made by him to the creditor, as where there was duress, fraud, a failure of consideration, or mistake of fact without a failure to exercise ordinary prudence; but he cannot recover back a payment voluntarily made with full knowledge of the facts.

A surety may recover back a payment made by him to the creditor or obligee when there has been a failure of consideration<sup>68</sup> or which he has been compelled to pay through duress<sup>69</sup> or fraud,<sup>70</sup> or which he has made under an agreement for a settlement made between him and the creditor, which the latter violates.<sup>71</sup> Likewise, a surety may recover a payment which, through ignorance of facts, he has made by mistake of fact<sup>72</sup> unless such mistake is the result of failure to exercise ordinary prudence.<sup>73</sup>

Where security, given by a surety, is converted into money, and brings more than the amount for which he is liable, he can recover the excess.<sup>74</sup>

Interest. Where the surety is allowed to recover payments made by him, he is entitled to interest thereon;<sup>75</sup> but if the surety would not be entitled to interest on security given by him to the creditor he is not entitled to interest on the proceeds thereof.<sup>76</sup>

Payments not recoverable. A surety cannot recover back a payment which he has voluntarily made with full knowledge of all the facts,<sup>77</sup> although under a mistake of law,<sup>78</sup> and which has been obtained by the creditor in good faith and applied on the debt.<sup>79</sup> A surety cannot recover an amount paid for his release<sup>80</sup> although the principal afterward pays the debt in full.<sup>81</sup>

An owner's premature payments to a contractor, and his failure to retain a per cent of the sums due, have been held not such a violation of a surety contract as to enable the surety to recover from the owner sums paid by the surety to workmen and materialmen.<sup>82</sup>

§ 294. — Payment after Discharge

A surety may recover payments made by him, without knowledge of the facts, after his discharge by the creditor's acts, as by the relinquishment or misapplication of security or a release of the principal or surety.

A surety may recover payments made by him, without knowledge of the facts, after he has been discharged by acts of the creditor or obligee,<sup>83</sup> as by the relinquishment or loss<sup>84</sup> or the misapplication<sup>85</sup> of security, or by a release of the principal<sup>86</sup> or of the surety.<sup>87</sup>

§ 295. — Payment of Judgment

A surety paying a judgment against him may recover the amount paid after a reversal; but where he pays a judgment against his principal which is afterward reversed he cannot recover from the judgment creditor.

87. Md.—Lodge v. Boone, 3 Harr. & J. 218.

Where the surety has paid a judgment or decree against him, he may recover the amount so paid after a reversal thereof;<sup>88</sup> but where he pays a judgment against his principal, and it is afterward reversed, he cannot recover from the judgment creditor, since there is no legal privity between them, and the remedy of the surety is against the principal.<sup>89</sup> So also, the surety cannot recover on a contract of settlement made between a judgment creditor and the principal, with respect to which there is no privity between the surety and the creditor.<sup>90</sup>

Suit by principal for surety. The fact that the surety has a remedy over against the principal for reimbursement or that he is authorized by statute to compel the principal to perform the obligation for which the surety has bound himself does not authorize the principal to sue, on behalf of the surety, for the recovery of money improvidently paid by the surety on a void judgment.<sup>91</sup>

§ 296. — Effect of Recovery from Principal

Where, after the surety has paid the debt, the creditor recovers from the principal, the surety may recover from the creditor the amount obtained from the principal, or, if there are several sureties, a proportionate part.

Where, after the surety has paid the debt, recovery is had by the creditor from the principal, the surety may recover from the creditor the amount obtained from the principal,<sup>92</sup> or a proportionate part, if there are several sureties.<sup>93</sup>

§ 297. — Payment by Cosurety

Where one surety makes full payment, a cosurety paying his proportionate part to the creditor cannot recover his payment, the creditor's duty being to account with the surety who paid in excess of his share.

Where, after the full payment by one surety, a cosurety pays his proportionate part to the creditor, such cosurety cannot recover his payment,<sup>94</sup> it being the duty of the creditor in such case to account with the surety who paid in excess of his share.<sup>95</sup>

§ 298. — Usury

A surety has been permitted to recover back from the creditor usury paid by himself. It has been held that he may recover usury exacted from his principal; under other authorities only the principal may do so.

In accordance with the doctrine permitting a debtor to recover usury paid by him, as discussed in the C.J.S. title Usury §§ 85, 93-100, also 66 C.J. p 268 note 1-p 269 note 15, p 284 note 9-p 291 note 90, a surety has been permitted to recover back from the creditor or obligee usury paid by himself;<sup>96</sup> and it has been held that, although the principal has reimbursed him, recovery of the usury must be had, not by the principal, but by the surety who paid it.<sup>97</sup> Where a surety has paid usury for his principal, he has right to sue for and reclaim it<sup>98</sup> unless he has been repaid the amount thereof by the principal.<sup>99</sup> It has been held that, where the surety obtains a surrender of the original usurious obligation by giving his individual obligation therefor, this does not constitute a payment of the old obligation, and, in an action by the creditor to enforce the new obligation, the surety is entitled to credit for a usurious payment made on the old one.<sup>1</sup>

Payments by principal. It has been held that a surety in a bond may recover or claim credits thereon for sums exacted from his principal as usurious interest.<sup>2</sup> On the other hand, the recovery of such

§ 299. Actions against Creditor

- a. At law
- b. In equity

a. At Law

A surety may maintain an action at law against the creditor on any of various grounds arising out of the relationship, such as breach of agreement, fraud, negligence in preserving and applying collateral, and conversion of collateral.

A surety may maintain an action at law against the creditor or obligee for damages for the breach of an agreement by which the surety was induced to enter into the suretyship contract,<sup>7</sup> or for fraud of the creditor or obligee in procuring him to sign the contract,<sup>8</sup> in which action a judgment or decision in a prior action by the obligee against the surety, as to such fraud, is conclusive of such fact,<sup>9</sup> but not a judgment in a prior action in which the creditor or obligee did not participate.<sup>10</sup> The surety may also sue for damages for negligence or fraud on the part of the creditor in preserving and applying collateral held by him,<sup>11</sup> or for converting such collateral,<sup>12</sup> and in such action the surety is not concluded by a judgment obtained against him by the creditor in an action on the contract of suretyship wherein the surety set up the misappropriation of the collateral by the creditor as a defense, without pleading it as a counterclaim, which defense was objected to by the creditor and ruled out by the court.<sup>13</sup>

A surety for the performance of a contract may recover from the obligee the amount of a judgment resulting from the latter's failure to retain a percentage of the payment, as required by the contract.<sup>17</sup>

Failure to perfect statutory liens

Where right of surety on bond given to secure contractor's performance of contract to have obligee retain certain percentages out of amount due contractor to assure latter's performance of contract did not depend on subrogation, and bond required surety to pay unpaid laborers and materialmen, irrespective of whether they perfected statutory liens, fact that laborers and materialmen had not perfected liens was immaterial in determining surety's right to recover from obligee an amount equal to judgments against surety in favor of unpaid material-

Set-off as defense. Where the surety sues the creditor in contract, the latter may avail himself of his right to proceed against the surety for the indebtedness of the principal by way of set-off.<sup>18</sup>

b. In Equity

- (1) In general
- (2) Injunction

(1) In General

A surety without an adequate remedy at law may sue the creditor in equity for protection and relief as to his rights and liabilities or for the adjustment of equities arising out of the contract.

Subject to the rules relating to procedure in equity generally, where there is no adequate remedy at law, a surety may bring a suit in equity against the creditor or obligee for protection and relief as to his rights and liabilities,<sup>19</sup> such as to compel an accounting by the creditor of the collateral placed in his hands<sup>20</sup> or of his transactions with the principal,<sup>21</sup> or to compel a release from liability by reason of the creditor's acts,<sup>22</sup> or for the adjustment of equities arising out of the contract.<sup>23</sup> Where claims against a surety exceed the amount of the penalty of the bond, the surety may sue in equity to secure a pro rata distribution of the amount of the penalty between several claimants;<sup>24</sup> but where a surety against whom an action at law is brought on a claim against the bond knows of other claims against it and has an opportunity, in that action, to present his defense to such claims by interpleader, he cannot, after the claimant recovers judgment, proceed in equity to litigate matters that he could have litigated in the action at law.<sup>25</sup>

Where a contractor's surety seeks an equity in the reserve fund provided for the protection of creditors, and brings the creditors and all parties into court, he subjects himself to whatever direct judgment may be entered on his liability to any party.<sup>26</sup>

Motion by surety to satisfy judgment against him, on the ground of an unauthorized release of the principal, is equitable in its nature<sup>27</sup> and should be granted where plaintiff in the judgment has no just right to enforce it.<sup>28</sup>

Property as surety. An owner of property which occupies the position of surety for the performance of a contract is entitled, in a proper case, to the remedies given by equity,<sup>29</sup> and he may have his property relieved of the burden by equitable application of set-offs by compelling the principal debtor to pay or by reducing the demand of the creditor to its equitable proportion, and permitting the owner to redeem his property by the payment of the true amount due,<sup>30</sup> and, where the creditor has a valid claim against the principal debtor from which the property owner should be relieved by the application of offsets, the latter is entitled to maintain a suit against the creditor to compel such offsets.<sup>31</sup>

Attorney's fees. A surety is not entitled to attorney's fees in a concursus proceeding brought by him at the expense of creditors for whose benefit the bond was given.<sup>32</sup>

(2) Injunction

In a proper case a surety may maintain a bill in equity to enjoin the creditor from proceeding against him or improperly collecting from him, or to restrain execution against him.

A surety may maintain a bill in equity to re-men and laborers after obligee paid retained percentages to contractor, without surety's consent.—Hochewar v. Maryland Casualty Co., supra.

strain the creditor from proceeding against him where he has been discharged from liability,<sup>33</sup> or to restrain him from collecting from the surety more than the latter's just proportion of the debt, where by the creditor's act the surety is deprived of his right of contribution from his cosureties,<sup>34</sup> or to restrain the creditor from collecting a usurious debt from him;<sup>35</sup> and, if he was not a party to the usury, and was ignorant thereof, he may maintain his bill without tendering the amount that is actually due.<sup>36</sup> However, it has been held that a surety is not entitled to enjoin the entry of a judgment against him where such relief would prejudice the legal rights of the creditor.<sup>37</sup>

Restraining execution. Where the rule obtains that the property of the principal must first be levied on for the principal indebtedness, as discussed supra § 279, a surety may obtain an injunction to restrain the taking of his property until after the principal's property has been subjected;<sup>38</sup> and this rule applies even though the only available property of the principal is encumbered, if his interest therein can be sold for the amount of the execution.<sup>39</sup> The surety is also entitled to an injunction restraining an execution against his property to satisfy a judgment against the principal and surety where, after the judgment is entered, a stay of execution is granted to the principal by the creditor without the surety's assent;<sup>40</sup> and a surety may be entitled to an injunction against an execution issued for too large an amount.<sup>41</sup> A surety cannot have the enforcement of a judgment against him and his solvent principal restrained on the ground of the latter's primary liability, since he has an adequate legal remedy by paying the debt and suing the principal for reimbursement.<sup>42</sup>

An uncontroverted allegation, by a surety in a suit to enjoin execution, that plaintiff in execution was dead at the time of issuance is sufficient.<sup>43</sup>

Conclusiveness of previous judgment. On a bill for injunctive relief against a judgment rendered against him on his bond, a surety cannot, in the absence of fraud, contest the merits of a previous judgment or decree rendered against his principal,<sup>44</sup> and, therefore, where his principal does not appeal from an order dissolving an injunction, his surety has no right to another injunction on the same ground.<sup>45</sup>

Extension of time for payment. A surety is entitled to exoneration in full by injunction against an execution sale of his property, after a release of the principal debtor's property from a judgment lien and extension of time for payment without the surety's consent.<sup>46</sup>

B. AS TO PRINCIPAL

§ 300. In General

As between principal and surety, equity always lends aid for the latter's protection. Out of the relationship the surety acquires the right to be exonerated by the principal.

Sufficiency of evidence

In a suit by one claiming to be a surety to restrain a suit on a bond to recover a deficiency arising in mortgage foreclosure, and contending that the mortgagee, with knowledge of the suretyship and without complainant's knowledge and consent, gave an extension to the person principally liable for payment of the debt, evidence has been held insufficient to establish the elements necessary for such relief.—Schumann v. Fidelity Union Trust Co., 3 A.2d 852, 126 N.J.Eq. 349, affirmed 12 A.2d 724, 127 N.J.Eq. 249.

47. Pa.—Massachusetts Bonding & Insurance Co. v. Smyser-Royer Co.,

the right to be exonerated by the principal debtor.<sup>48</sup> A surety's right to recover from the principal, in a separate action, the amount paid by the surety on the obligation is not destroyed by the obligee's failure to proceed against the principal.<sup>49</sup>

A surety for contractors, on taking over their construction job, has been held to have the right, as against them and under its contract, to continue their machinery in use on the job.<sup>50</sup>

Subrogation of a surety to the rights of the principal is discussed in the C.J.S. title Subrogation § 57, also 60 C.J. p 771 note 99-p 772 note 5.

§ 301. Rights Before Payment or Satisfaction of Principal Debt or Obligation

A surety has many rights, as to his principal, before the surety pays the debt, and the relationship of debtor and creditor is generally held to exist between them from the making of the suretyship contract; but the surety's right of action against the principal ordinarily accrues at the time of payment by the former.

Whether a surety is deemed to be a creditor of his principal from the date of his suretyship or from the date of his payment of the debt depends very much on the character of the remedy or redress he may seek.<sup>51</sup> While many of the rights of a surety as to his principal depend on payment by him,<sup>52</sup> he possesses many before payment;<sup>53</sup> and such rights have their inception as soon as he executes the instrument<sup>54</sup> and are fixed by the law in force at that time.<sup>55</sup> Thus it is generally held that the relationship of debtor and creditor exists between the principal and surety from the time the contract of suretyship is made,<sup>56</sup> although in some cases it has been asserted that the relationship does not arise until the surety pays the debt of the principal.<sup>57</sup>

Usually the surety, before payment, cannot interfere with the right of the principal to deal with his property as he pleases.<sup>58</sup> Ordinarily, and this

(1) Until the surety has paid, the principal is not the surety's debtor.—Johnston v. Grimm, 229 N.W. 716, 209 Iowa 1050.

(2) It has also been held that the overwhelming weight of authority is that the relationship of creditor and debtor arises immediately on the signing by the surety of the obligation because of the implied promise of the principal to reimburse him in case he is compelled to pay it.—Leach v. Bassman, 227 N.W. 339, 208 Iowa 1374.

Right to seize principal's property
The mere existence of the rela-

is the common-law rule,<sup>59</sup> where one is surety for another for the payment of a debt, the right of action by the surety against the principal accrues at the time of the payment by the former;<sup>60</sup> and the payment must be made before the action for reimbursement is brought, as discussed infra § 309 a, notwithstanding the surety became such through misrepresentations made to him.<sup>61</sup> This rule has been changed or modified by some statutes.<sup>62</sup>

§ 302. — As to Debts Due Principal from Surety

In a suit by the principal on a claim against the surety, the mere fact of suretyship is no defense if no action has been taken against him on the debt for which he is surety. If the principal or his estate is insolvent, equity recognizes the surety's right to retain any funds of the principal in his hands, and the principal cannot recover from his surety without first indemnifying him.

When the surety is sued by the principal on a claim held by the latter against the former, the mere fact of the suretyship will not be a defense to the surety if no action has been taken against him on the debt for which he is surety,<sup>63</sup> nor will it be a defense against the personal representative of the principal;<sup>64</sup> and it has been held that the surety cannot refuse to pay claims which have been assigned to the principal if the surety has not paid anything on the debt for which he is liable, although judgment has been obtained against him.<sup>65</sup> The principal has the right to assign to the creditor, as security, a debt due from the surety to the principal,<sup>66</sup> but an oral agreement between the principal and the surety that a debt of the latter to the former shall go in satisfaction of the liability about to be assumed by the surety will not prevail over an oral assignment of the debt by the principal to a third person before the surety became bound.<sup>67</sup>

A surety who has been fully indemnified by the principal cannot object to paying a debt owing by him to the principal.<sup>68</sup> If, however, the principal<sup>69</sup> or his estate<sup>70</sup> is insolvent, equity recognizes the right of the surety to retain any funds of the principal in his hands, and the principal will not be allowed to recover from his surety without first indemnifying the latter.<sup>71</sup> The rule has been held to apply even as against an assignee of the principal;<sup>72</sup> but such application has also been refused.<sup>73</sup>

Stay of proceedings when creditor's action pending. If a surety sued by his principal does not object that suit has been begun against him on the debt for which he is liable as surety, it is discretionary with the trial court afterward to allow a stay of proceedings.<sup>74</sup>

tionship of surety and principal does not always give the surety the right to seize any and all property of the principal which may come into its hands by virtue of independent and unrelated transactions, prior to the surety's payment of the principal debt.—*Corn Exchange Bank & Trust Co. v. ### § 303. — Enforcement of Payment or Other Exoneration

In equity and under some statutes, after the maturity of the debt or accrual of liability, a surety who has not paid the debt, even though he has not been troubled by the creditor, has a right to compel the principal to exonerate him from liability, to pay the debt, or to secure him against loss.

Before maturity of the debt, or accrual of liability, for which he is surety, the surety has no right of action in equity to be indemnified against apprehended danger of loss by reason of his undertaking.<sup>75</sup> After maturity, however, in the absence of a present remedy at law,<sup>76</sup> although he has not paid and has not been troubled by the creditor, or asked by him to pay, he has the right, before payment, to go into a court of equity, at any time, to compel the principal to exonerate him from liability or to pay the debt,<sup>77</sup> or to secure him against

Great weight of authority

Me.—Matthews v. Matthews, 148 A. 796, 128 Me. 495.

Aid or procedure quia timet

(1) The bill in equity is a bill quia timet, or in the nature of a bill quia timet.

Tenn.—Henegar v. Brannon, 137 S. W.2d 889, 24 Tenn.App. 1.

(2) A surety is indeed a favorite of equity, which will extend its aid in exoneration, quia timet, before he pays.—American Surety Co. of New York v. Lewis State Bank, C.C.A. Fla., 58 F.2d 559.

(3) Surety claiming exoneration proceeds before payment quia timet, seeking to have payment made to creditor.—Glades County, Fla., v. Detroit Fidelity & Surety Co., C.C.A. Fla., 57 F.2d 449.

Surety is not required to suffer judgment before taking steps to compel principal debtor to comply with his obligations, but may recover against principal debtor before payment of accommodation debt or suffering judgment therefor.—Woodward v. Hollis, 222 P.2d 862, 93 Colo. 17.

Absence of personal liability; exoneration of property

A person who, without assuming any personal liability, has given security for another's debt may maintain an action, the debt being due and unpaid, to compel the principal debtor to exonerate his property.—Matthews v. Matthews, 148 A. 796, 128 Me. 495.

Surety as equitable assignee

A surety seeking in equity to compel the principal to perform the obligation when due stands in the position of an equitable assignee of the creditor's claim against the principal and not of the principal's property or property interests.—Maryland Cas. Co. v. Walsh, 155 P.2d 759, 116 Mont. 559.

Enforcement of liability of all indemnitors

Surety can obtain relief in equity against indemnified principal debtor before actual loss occurs where, incident to other equitable relief, it is appropriate to ascertain and enforce liability of all indemnitors of single debt in single equity suit brought to enforce such debt, which may require consideration of several phases of one general transaction concerning land resorted to as security and forming subject matter of equitable controversy before court.—Ferguson v. Brogan, 149 So. 772, 111 Fla. 224.

Property not free from legal claims; unassailable fund

Principal quia timet cannot move creditor into position of doubtfulness by requiring him to participate in questionable effort to convert into money property which may not be wholly free from legal claims and penalties; although surety is a favorite of equity and may, if he fears, secure its aid before payment, essence of such relief is clear conscience and certainty of unassailable fund.—Johnson v. Thomas, D.C.Tex., 16 F.Supp. 1013.

Creditor as codefendant; stakeholder

(1) The creditor may be made a codefendant in such action, provided he can himself enforce performance, and neglects or refuses to do so.—Carpenter v. Park, 66 P.2d 224, 19 Cal.App.2d 567.

(2) A mere stakeholder, who is not alleged to owe anything as yet, should not be drawn into the controversy between the other parties.—Southwestern Surety Ins. Co. v. Wells, D.C.Pa., 217 F. 294.

(3) Parties generally see infra § 329.

s.<sup>78</sup> provided no rights of the creditor are adjudged thereby.<sup>79</sup> The doctrine in such cases rests on the simple right, as between the principal and surety, that the surety has to be protected by the principal;<sup>80</sup> a surety is awarded exoneration in order that mischief and circuity of action may be avoided;<sup>81</sup> he is not obliged to make inroads on his own resources when the loss must in the end fall on the principal.<sup>82</sup>

It is not essential that the claim of the surety for relief should depend on the fact that he will incur irreparable injury;<sup>83</sup> nor must he show any fraudulent disposition of property,<sup>84</sup> or the presence of a wrongful purpose,<sup>85</sup> or special reason for fearing loss;<sup>86</sup> and the insolvency of the surety will not preclude him from maintaining the claim.<sup>87</sup>

It has been held, however, that a surety cannot invoke the doctrine of exoneration unless his liability is imminent<sup>88</sup> and absolute,<sup>89</sup> and that a court of equity will not interfere in behalf of a surety to compel the principal to pay the debt before it has been ascertained that the fund primarily liable is insufficient to discharge it,<sup>90</sup> or while the creditor is in court seeking to enforce it,<sup>91</sup> unless such proceedings will not subject the latter to undue delay.<sup>92</sup> So a surety who has received an agreed security for his assuming the position has been denied the right to proceed in equity before payment to compel the principal to give him any further security;<sup>93</sup> and the fact that by reason of the death or insolvency of his cosureties he has become the only responsible party on the bond does not entitle a surety to additional security.<sup>94</sup> The form in which that protection may be secured is not material where the right to it exists and it can be had without prejudice to the creditor.<sup>95</sup>

exercised for the benefit of one creditor to the exclusion of all other interested persons.<sup>97</sup> Under the doctrine of exoneration, a surety is subrogated only to the creditor's rights against the debtor.<sup>98</sup>

Custody or control of fund. The exoneration of a surety does not entitle him to custody or control of the fund applied in his exoneration.<sup>99</sup>

Under some statutes a surety may maintain an action against his principal to compel him to perform the obligation when due.<sup>1</sup> Such statutes have been held valid,<sup>2</sup> since they involve only a statutory recognition of one of the well-established doctrines of equity jurisprudence;<sup>3</sup> the principle underlying such a statute is based on the duty of every person to perform his agreements, a court of equity enforcing the actual accomplishment of the thing stipulated for on the ground that what is lawfully agreed to be done ought to be done.<sup>4</sup>

Under a statute providing that an action may be brought against two or more persons for the purpose of compelling one to satisfy a debt to the other, for which plaintiff is bound for security, the real character of such an action is that it is one in the nature of exoneration and subrogation,<sup>5</sup> and it is in equity, and not at law,<sup>6</sup> notwithstanding a money judgment is asked for.<sup>7</sup>

Under at least one statute, a surety may maintain an action against his principal to obtain indemnity against the debt or liability for which he is bound, before it is due, whenever any of the statutory grounds exist for an order for arrest and bail or for an attachment;<sup>8</sup> such a statute has been said to be meant to change the common-law rule,<sup>9</sup> so that a surety should not be compelled to stand by and see the principal, for whose obligations he is bound, fraudulently dispose of his property and leave his just debts to be paid by those whom he has deluded into becoming his sureties.<sup>10</sup>

Receivership. A surety has been held unable to maintain a proceeding in equity to compel his principal to convey his property to a receiver, to secure him before he has paid the debt, and before recovering judgment and exhausting his remedies at law;<sup>11</sup> but where the court otherwise has jurisdiction in the particular proceeding before it to protect the surety it may appoint a receiver on facts justifying such appointment,<sup>12</sup> to the end that the property in the custody of the court, and the interests of all claimants thereto, may be fully protected.<sup>13</sup>

§ 304. — Recourse to Security or Indemnity

In the absence of contractual authority, a surety cannot apply security before the debt matures or before he becomes liable therefor. After maturity, if he is indemnified against loss or damage, ordinarily he must suffer such loss before he can recover on the indemnity, while if the indemnity is against liability it may be enforced before payment; the right of the surety in these respects is controlled by the terms of the agreement.

In the absence of express contractual authority to do so,<sup>14</sup> the surety cannot apply security before maturity of the debt<sup>15</sup> or before he has become liable therefor;<sup>16</sup> and previous to that time he has no interest which he can assign.<sup>17</sup>

After the debt matures, however, even before the surety pays it, he can, under some decisions, have recourse to his indemnity.<sup>18</sup> If the surety is indemnified against loss or damage, ordinarily he must suffer such loss before he can recover on the indemnity,<sup>19</sup> the recovery of a judgment against him<sup>20</sup> or the allowance of a demand against his estate<sup>21</sup> being such a damnification as will entitle him or his administrator to look to his security. If, however, the indemnity is against liability, no damage need be sustained and the indemnity may be enforced before payment.<sup>22</sup>

So, where a promissory note shows on its face that it was given by a principal as a mere indemnity to secure the payee as surety, the latter cannot recover thereon without proving that he has sustained loss by payment of the obligation against which he was indemnified;<sup>23</sup> but, although there is some authority to the contrary,<sup>24</sup> a promissory note in ordinary form given to the payee by his principal as collateral security may be sued on when it matures, notwithstanding the debt for which the payee is surety for the maker has not been paid;<sup>25</sup> and the liability of a surety for a debt not due may furnish a good consideration for a promissory note, on a promise, either express or implied by law, on the part of the surety, that he will pay and discharge the debt of his principal.<sup>26</sup> Such a note may be the foundation of an action and a valid attachment, before payment of the secured debt, at least to the extent of the actual payment made by the surety before taking judgment in his action.<sup>27</sup> A note executed after the action is commenced, however, will not support it.<sup>28</sup>

The right of the surety in these respects will be controlled by the terms of the agreement between the parties, as where it is stipulated that the surety may enforce his security on default of the principal<sup>29</sup> or the contract is otherwise of such a nature as to give the surety the right to enforce his security before payment.<sup>30</sup>

If the principal, to secure his surety, has given the latter a warrant for a judgment, the surety can enter judgment as soon as the debt is due and before payment, for the entire amount authorized thereby;<sup>31</sup> and he can assign a confessed judgment to the creditor,<sup>32</sup> but he cannot enforce the judgment by execution for any more than is necessary for his indemnity.<sup>33</sup>

One of the normal incidents of a bond is the right of the surety to recourse against the principal for losses paid by surety.—Commercial Standard Ins. Co. v. Ebner, Tex., 228 S.W.2d 507.

Effect of Negotiable Instruments Law

A provision of the Negotiable Instruments Law that "where the instrument is paid by a person secondarily liable thereon, it is not discharged" does not change the settled rule that a surety who pays the principal obligation has a right of reasonable outlay,<sup>37</sup> even though the creditor was not bound to respect the suretyship,<sup>38</sup> and although the surety made payment to secure his individual release,<sup>39</sup> or the principal was not a party to the suit in which the judgment paid was had<sup>40</sup> or had not signed the bond.<sup>41</sup> The rights of sureties against their principal are not affected by any private arrangement among themselves for the distribution of the liability<sup>42</sup> or by the particular manner in which the relationship arose.<sup>43</sup>

Where there is an express contract to indemnify, the surety's right necessarily depends on its terms,<sup>44</sup> which may be such as to preclude the right to be reimbursed.<sup>45</sup>

A surety has no claim by reason of his suretyship after payment of the debt by the principal,<sup>46</sup> notwithstanding a special agreement between the creditor and surety that the former's claim against the latter remain unextinguished;<sup>47</sup> nor does one surety have any right against the principal where payment of the debt was made by his cosurety.<sup>48</sup>

Payment of bill or note by surety. A surety, on payment of a bill or note, is entitled to maintain an action against the maker for reimbursement.<sup>49</sup> The payment of a note by the surety therein cannot be regarded as a payment by him of an original debt of the principal which was discharged by the proceeds of the secured note, so as to deprive the principal of a right which depended on his having paid such original debt.<sup>50</sup>

A payment by one of the makers of a joint and several note, who is in reality a surety for the other, will not operate as a payment unless this was so intended, and an action for his benefit may be brought on a note in the name of the payee.<sup>51</sup>

Double suretyship. When judgment has been recovered against a surety and his principal, which the former has paid, he cannot recover from the latter where the judgment was founded on a default of a third person for whom the surety was surety to the principal, the surety's liability to the principal in such case being primary.<sup>52</sup>

action on the implied obligation of reimbursement, irrespective of what right he might be able to assert in equity by subrogation, equitable assignment, or otherwise.—W. H. Marston Co. v. Kochritz, 293 P. 120, 109 Cal.App. 331.

Stock and money deposited as margin
Ind.—Damler v. Baine, 51 N.E.2d 885, 114 Ind.App. 534.

Relative liabilities of principal and surety

In an action on a note, where judgment is rendered against both principal and surety, and right to reimbursement is claimed, the relative liabilities thereon of the principal and surety inter sese continue the same as on the note.—Saied v. Abeyounis, 9 S.E.2d 399, 217 N.C. 644.

Satisfaction of judgment; judgment over

(1) Surety on bond of guardian who was removed was entitled to provision in judgment against guardian and surety that, on satisfying judgment, surety was entitled to judgment over against guardian.—In re Deming's Guardianship, 73 P.2d 764, 192 Wash. 190.

(2) Receiver could not escape liability to his surety for amount of judgment against receiver, which surety had satisfied, on ground that judgment against receiver was void because rendered after his discharge, where he was not discharged until April 28, 1944, and judgment was rendered on Jan. 13, 1943.—American principal has died and his estate has been distributed, the surety may assert his rights against the distributees of the estate.<sup>53</sup>

b. Effect of Taking Security

A surety's rights to reimbursement are not affected by his taking security unless there was an agreement that he should look to such security only.

The rights of a surety to reimbursement from his principal are not affected by his taking security from his principal<sup>54</sup> or from a third person<sup>55</sup> unless there was an agreement that the surety should look to such security only.<sup>56</sup>

c. With Respect to Particular Parties and Relations

- (1) In general
- (2) Where there are two or more principals
- (3) One who assumes liability without principal's request

(1) In General

Any one of several sureties who makes payments is entitled to recover the amounts paid. The principal cannot recover from his surety; but a former principal who has become surety can recover from the former surety who has become principal, in the absence of an agreement to the contrary.

Any one of several sureties who makes payments is entitled to recover the amounts so paid by him.<sup>57</sup> So a surety, after contributing to a cosurety who has paid the creditor, has a right to be reimbursed by the principal,<sup>58</sup> notwithstanding the cosurety, having previously obtained a judgment against the principal for the whole amount, assigns it thereafter to another.<sup>59</sup>

The principal cannot recover from his surety,<sup>60</sup> even though the former appears to be the surety;<sup>61</sup> but, after a change in the relationship, a former principal who has become surety can recover from the former surety who has become principal,<sup>62</sup> unless there was some express agreement with respect to the matter forbidding it.<sup>63</sup>

A principal who has applied for a supersedeas bond securing only himself is not liable under provisions therein securing others.<sup>64</sup>

(2) Where There Are Two or More Principals

While coobligors who are principals are jointly liable to their surety, a surety can recover the full amount paid from any of his principals.

Coobligors who are principals are jointly liable to their surety for the amount paid by him;<sup>65</sup> and a surety can recover the full amount from any of his several principals,<sup>66</sup> and, although there is some authority to the contrary,<sup>67</sup> this rule has been held to obtain where the default was committed by one only<sup>68</sup> unless such default was committed with the connivance of the surety<sup>69</sup> or there was an express agreement that the principals were to be liable in certain proportions.<sup>70</sup> It does not make any difference that judgment has been rendered against some of the principals only<sup>71</sup> or that the surety executed the instrument before some of the principals had signed it.<sup>72</sup>

(3) One Who Assumes Liability without Principal's Request

A surety has a right to reimbursement or indemnity from his principal only where he became surety with the knowledge, and at the request, express or implied, of the principal.

A surety who executed the contract without the knowledge of the principal cannot recover from the latter,<sup>73</sup> since there cannot be an implied promise on the part of the principal to pay the surety if there was no request, express or implied,<sup>74</sup> to incur the liability;<sup>75</sup> so the right to indemnity against the principal arises only when the surety became such at the request, express or implied, of the principal.<sup>76</sup> A request from the principal has been implied from his accepting the benefit of the surety's contract,<sup>77</sup> from the appearance of the surety in court to defend a suit,<sup>78</sup> and from the fact that the principal knew that a surety was required in the particular case;<sup>79</sup> and, where two or more debtors are jointly liable, a request by one of them will be regarded as a request by all.<sup>80</sup>

d. Enforcement of Security

After payment by the surety, there is no obstacle to his enforcing any security he may hold; nor will he be restrained from enforcing security because he entered into a compromise with the creditor, in good faith and to the principal's advantage.

After payment by the surety, there is no longer any obstacle in the way of his enforcing any security he may hold,<sup>81</sup> but if the surety has not been given any security he does not acquire a lien on the property of his principal by the mere fact of having made payment.<sup>82</sup> The fact that the debt of the principal was usurious will not prevent the surety from retaining his security;<sup>83</sup> nor will he be restrained from enforcing security because he entered into a compromise with the creditor, if it was made in good faith and is manifestly to the advantage of the principal.<sup>84</sup>

Abandonment of an indemnity agreement made by the principal will not be implied in the absence of a contract discharging it.<sup>85</sup>

e. Notice and Demand

In order to recover from the principal, the surety, in the absence of contractual requirement, is not required to give him notice that payment has been made or to make a demand on him.

In order to recover from the principal, the surety is not, in the absence of a contract governing the matter, required to give him notice that pay-

§ 308. — As to Debt Due Principal from Surety

A surety who has satisfied the debt may, as against the principal or his assignee, set off the amount against a debt to the principal.

After the surety has satisfied the debt for which he was liable, he may, as against the principal or his assignee, set off the amount against a debt to the principal.<sup>88</sup>

- a. In general; time and manner of payment
- b. Voluntary payment

- c. Payment by note, draft, or other obligation
- d. Satisfaction in, or levy on, property
- e. Part payments

a. In General; Time and Manner of Payment

In the absence of special contract, a surety must make payment before he can bring an action for reimbursement or indemnity against his principal; but it is immaterial to his right how he extinguished the secured debt or paid the sum he seeks to recover.

In the absence of special contract,<sup>89</sup> payment must be made by a surety before an action for reimbursement or indemnity is, or can be, brought by him against his principal.<sup>90</sup> Moreover, a surety who before maturity has paid the debt on which he was liable as such cannot recover from the principal until it becomes due;<sup>91</sup> nor can he before then set off the amount so paid against a debt due the principal.<sup>92</sup>

Payment in full

Pa.—Wright v. Harrisburg Trust Co., 43 Pa.Dist. & Co. 47, 51 Dauph. 213—Wright v. Harrisburg Trust Co., 51 Dauph.Co. 413.

Rule applied to payment of bill or note.

(1) Generally.—Henegar v. Brannon, 137 S.W.2d 889, 24 Tenn.App. 1—8 C.J. p 588 note 78.

(2) Payment of a renewal note by the surety entitles him to reimbursement from the parties liable on the original obligation.—Frye v. Sims, 86 S.E. 249, 144 Ga. 74—50 C. J. p 251 note 48.

(3) As between him and borrowing maker, accommodation comaker is surety and, until he actually pays note, has no right to sue borrower, right to sue being based on implied contract and not on note.—Goldberg v. Albert, 291 N.Y.S. 855, 161 Misc. 281.

(4) Where, after the maturity of a note, money is paid by the surety to the payee, on an agreement that it is to be considered as indemnity, and that the payee shall sue the maker in his own name at the expense of, and for the benefit of, the surety, there is no payment of the note, and an action by the payee is not barred thereby.—Brown v. Whittington, 64 P. 649, 39 Or. 300.

91. Ind.—White v. Miller, 47 Ind. 385.

Ohio.—Schick v. Ott, 7 Ohio Cir.Ct., N.S., 325, 27 Ohio Cir.Ct. 697.

92. Ind.—Jackson v. Adamson, 7 Blackf. 597.

It is immaterial to the surety's right how he extinguished the secured debt or paid the sum he seeks to recover.<sup>93</sup> Thus a surety may recover from his principals for a payment on their obligation made in the first instance by a stranger and repaid to the latter by the surety,<sup>94</sup> if the surety procured payment to be made by the third person;<sup>95</sup> and where the surety gives his principal the money with which to pay the debt, with the understanding that it is to be so applied, as between them the latter is estopped to claim that he paid the debt with his own money.<sup>96</sup> A surety who replevies the debt by a valid replevy bond may proceed against the principal as though he had made actual payment in money,<sup>97</sup> as may a surety who, having an account in the obligee bank for more than the amount due on the suretyship obligation, directed the cashier to charge the amount thereof to his account, which the cashier agreed to do.<sup>98</sup> Where an obligee gives the bond to the surety thereon, such surety cannot support assumpsit against the principal for money paid, laid out, and expended by him for the use of the latter, or any of the common money counts.<sup>99</sup>

Payment into court pending an accounting between the creditor and surety of the amount of a judgment which the former has recovered against the latter on the suretyship obligation is a sufficient payment to entitle the surety to reimbursement from the principal,<sup>1</sup> even though the accounting between the creditor and the surety has not been determined and the court still retains the money.<sup>2</sup>

Imprisonment of surety on a capias ad satisfaciendum is not satisfaction to the creditor.<sup>3</sup>

Where a surety of an administrator succeeds him, owing to a breach of the bond, and indorses upon the bond a receipt of the money due thereon as money received from himself as surety, and has charged himself with it in his inventory, he can maintain an action against the administrator for money paid for the use of the latter.<sup>4</sup>

b. Voluntary Payment

- (1) In general; present legal obligation
- (2) As affected by character of instrument
- (3) No legal obligation to pay
- (4) Waiver of objection or defense by surety

(1) In General; Present Legal Obligation

A surety is entitled to reimbursement if he satisfies a present liability, and he need not wait to be coerced by process, or for demand, suit, judgment, issuance of execution, or maturity of the debt; nor is his right affected by the fact that he paid without request or permission from, or notice to, the principal. The fact that the creditor could not compel the principal to pay is not necessarily a defense to the principal against the surety who has paid.

Whatever present liability on the part of a surety exists, or has become fixed by judicial determination, may be paid off and satisfied by him without waiting to be coerced by process, and such payment will entitle him to reimbursement from his principal;<sup>5</sup> a payment by a surety cannot be said to be voluntary as long as the obligation is en-

Judicial determination not essential

(1) It is not the law that a surety is legally bound to pay only after judicial determination, particularly where a statute provides that if a surety satisfies the principal obligation, or any part of it, with or without legal proceedings, the principal is bound to reimburse what the surety has disbursed.—Kipp v. Paul, 103 P.2d 675, 110 Mont. 513.

forceable.<sup>6</sup> Thus the surety has been allowed to recover where the payment was made without demand or suit,<sup>7</sup> before, or without, rendition of judgment,<sup>8</sup> before execution issued,<sup>9</sup> or before maturity of the debt.<sup>10</sup>

It is no ground of objection to the surety's right that he paid to avoid seizure and arrest,<sup>11</sup> that the principal had a demand against the creditor of which the surety did not take advantage,<sup>12</sup> that payment was made without request<sup>13</sup> or permission<sup>14</sup> from the principal to pay, or that the surety did not notify the principal of his intention to pay.<sup>15</sup> Likewise, the right of the surety is not affected by a compromise or settlement with the creditor which does not injure the rights of the principal<sup>16</sup> unless the settlement was made by

(2) Where principal's liquor license had been revoked for violation of law and surety on bond conditioned on nonviolation had paid its liability on bond, surety was entitled to sue principal on its agreement to reimburse surety for loss sustained, notwithstanding absence of any adjudication by court that principal had violated law.—Etna Casualty & Surety Co. v. Fleischman Wine & Liquor Co., 200 N.E. 23, 269 N.Y. 614.

Proof of liability not necessary

Where surety company in fidelity bond in good faith made payment under bond to employee's employer for amount of alleged shortage, employee became bound, as a matter of law, under terms of bond to reimburse company for payment without necessity of company's proving its liability under bond.—*Central Sur. & Ins. #### Reason for rule

(1) Implied contract on part of principal to indemnify surety takes effect from time relationship of principal and surety is entered into.—In re Deal's Estate, 46 N.E.2d 643, 70 Ohio App. 503.

(2) When implied contract arises generally see infra § 316.

Even without a contract provision so authorizing, a surety may discharge obligation of principal without waiting for suit to be filed against him and is thereupon entitled to look to principal for reimbursement.—National Surety Corporation v. Peoples Milling Co., D.C. Ky., 57 F.Supp. 281.

Payment of overdue note

Payment by surety of note which was overdue was not voluntary even though made without demand or suit.—Henneke v. Strack, Mo.App., 101 S.W.2d 743.

Licensee-principal's failure to answer charges

Where liquor licensee failed to answer charges by control board or to seek review of its findings, court, in action of surety on bond against licensee for indemnity, would presume that board's action was legal and that proof sustained order revoking license; licensee's refusal to meet charges and failure to challenge board's findings precluded his questioning his surety's good faith in paying penalty of bond; such failure and licensee's quiescence, notwithstanding board's revocation of license, justified surety in paying penalty to board, which entitled surety to indemnity, without waiting for law action.—Fidelity & Casualty Co. of New York v. Zappolo, 274 N.Y.S. 698, 153 Misc. 258.

Under statute requiring principal to reimburse surety for amount paid to satisfy principal obligation without legal proceedings, it was unnecessary for surety to wait until receiver obtained judgment against it in his suit on fidelity bond before paying sum agreed on in settlement of his claim.—Pacific Indemnity Co. v. Hargreaves, 98 P.2d 217, 36 Cal. App.2d 338.

Effect of agreement to indemnify surety

(1) Where agreement by which defendants agreed to indemnify surety for any amount surety was required to pay pursuant to bond authorized surety to make settlement if it deemed itself liable, regardless of whether such liability in fact existed, and authorized it to make settlement without notifying defendants, surety was under no necessity to require its liability on the bond to be fixed by final judgment before making settlement with claimant in order to recover on indemnity agreement.—Maryland Casualty Co. v. Spitscaufsky, 178 S.W. 2d 368, 352 Mo. 547.

(2) Express contract for indemnification or reimbursement generally see infra § 315.

Reversal of judgment in favor of bail

Where a recognizance has been forfeited and suit brought on it, resulting in a judgment in favor of the bail, and, on appeal, the judgment is reversed and the cause remanded, the liability of the bail is fixed and if he compromises with the state and pays a part of the amount of the recognizance in discharge of the forfeiture, he may look to his principal for repayment.—*Stevens v. the surety without legal responsibility and without the principal's being a party thereto.<sup>17</sup>

Obligations unenforceable by creditor against principal. While it has been said that the principal must have been bound legally for the debt,<sup>18</sup> it has been held that if the creditor can hold the surety it will not necessarily be a defense to the principal, as against the surety, that the principal could not be compelled by the creditor to pay the debt.<sup>19</sup> Where the principal, having a defense against the creditor, negligently fails to plead it, and suffers judgment in an action by the creditor to go against him or his surety, on payment thereof by the latter he may recover from the principal.<sup>20</sup> Likewise, a surety compelled to pay a debt which is barred, as against the principal, by a statute of limitations, may recover from the principal the amount he is so compelled to pay,<sup>21</sup> and this applies where the creditor has failed to present his claim against the estate of the principal within the time designated by statute.<sup>22</sup>

Where the contract of the parties provides that the surety is entitled to credit for all disbursements made in good faith under the belief that he was liable or that it was necessary to make them, a surety making payment under such conditions is entitled to reimbursement.<sup>23</sup>

Payment of confessed judgment. Although a surety is prohibited by a statutory provision from suffering judgment to go against him by confession or default when the principal debtor is willing to defend, if he does suffer such judgment to be rendered he can maintain an action to recover the money from the principal,<sup>24</sup> but in such case he occupies the position of the creditor suing on the original debt, and must establish its validity and repel all defenses against it.<sup>25</sup>

(2) As Affected by Character of Instrument

The surety's right to reimbursement is not affected by the fact that the bond on which payment was made could not have been exacted of the principal by the obligee, or by objections to the instrument which the principal is estopped to set up. The fact that a bond is not a good statutory bond will not defeat liability if it is a valid common-law obligation.

The right of the surety to reimbursement from the principal is not affected by the fact that the bond on which payment was made could not have been exacted of the principal by the obligee<sup>26</sup> or by objections to the sufficiency of the instrument which the principal is estopped to set up;<sup>27</sup> and the fact that a bond is not a good statutory bond will not defeat liability if it is a valid and binding common-law obligation.<sup>28</sup>

With respect to the right of the surety on the bond of a licensee to recover from the latter, the surety has no express or implied duty to inform him of the forfeiture of the bond before paying the amount due on the forfeiture, such payment not being, on this ground, voluntary;<sup>29</sup> nor is the surety, paying in good faith, prevented from recovering by the fact that the licensee may have been deprived of his rights by reason of faulty notice, or lack of notice, of revocation from the public authorities.<sup>30</sup>

(3) No Legal Obligation to Pay

A surety cannot recover from his principal for a payment made by the surety with knowledge of the facts and without legal compulsion.

Where payment is made with knowledge of the facts,<sup>31</sup> a surety cannot recover from his principal for a payment made if the surety was not under any legal obligation to make it,<sup>32</sup> as where the principal is not liable and the surety may assert the same defense,<sup>33</sup> or where the surety or the principal has been discharged or released from liability,<sup>34</sup> unless, as discussed infra subdivision b (4) of this section, the surety having a good defense to an action for the debt properly waived it. A discharge of others than the principal or surety does not, however, affect the surety's rights.<sup>35</sup>

A payment will not be merely voluntary if the surety was ignorant of the facts constituting a defense<sup>36</sup> and could not have discovered them with due diligence,<sup>37</sup> but a payment by a surety, made with knowledge of the facts, although under the mistaken belief that he was bound to make it, is voluntary, within the inhibition against payment where there is no legal liability.<sup>38</sup>

A part only of the surety's payment may be voluntary, in which case he can recover for the part only which was not voluntary.<sup>39</sup> Thus interest for which he and the principal were not liable is not recoverable;<sup>40</sup> and where deductions should have been made, but the surety pays the full amount, he cannot recover from the principal for the amount in excess of that properly due.<sup>41</sup>

Before accounting. Where an accounting by the principal in a trust capacity may be necessary to fix liability, ordinarily such accounting must be had before payment of the surety of the alleged liability can operate to charge the principal.<sup>42</sup> The parties interested may, however, occupy such relations as to estop themselves to object that the payment was made before such accounting.<sup>43</sup>

Rights to security. If the surety is not liable for the debt, he cannot acquire any rights to security by making payment.<sup>44</sup>

(4) Waiver of Objection or Defense by Surety

A surety's right to reimbursement from his principal is not affected by his waiver of a personal defense or of the statute of limitations or frauds.

The surety, in order to be entitled to reimbursement from his principal, is not compelled to take advantage of every technical objection.<sup>45</sup> He may waive a personal defense,<sup>46</sup> such as incapacity from coverture<sup>47</sup> or a change in the contract between the creditor and the principal.<sup>48</sup>

as to him and to his principal, he cannot recover;<sup>49</sup> but, if the debt is not barred as to the principal, the surety may waive the statute of limitations for himself, and payment under such circumstances will not be voluntary so as to deprive him of the right to reimbursement.<sup>50</sup> So the rule permitting the surety to waive defenses is applied to the defense of the statute of frauds; he may pay the debt, although his promise was not in writing, and recover the amount from the principal.<sup>51</sup>

c. Payment by Note, Draft, or Other Obligation

For purposes of reimbursement from the principal, a surety is deemed to have paid if the creditor accepts his note or draft as payment; and he is entitled to reimbursement before such instrument is paid.

For purposes of reimbursement from the principal, payment may be sufficiently made by a surety by the passing of negotiable security,<sup>52</sup> and payment will be deemed to have been made by the surety if he gives his own note<sup>53</sup> or draft,<sup>54</sup> where it is accepted by the creditor as payment;<sup>55</sup> and the surety is entitled to reimbursement from the principal before the instrument so accepted by the creditor has been paid<sup>56</sup> or although it is uncollectable,<sup>57</sup> unless something remains to be done to carry his engagement into effect.<sup>58</sup> A nonnegotiable note, however, will not be regarded as payment.<sup>59</sup>

A surety contributing to his cosurety by giving his own note is entitled to reimbursement from the principal.<sup>60</sup>

d. Satisfaction in, or Levy on, Property

The surety may recover from the principal if he has satisfied the debt in property, such as land, or if it has been satisfied by levy on his property.

It is sufficient to entitle the surety to recover from the principal that he has satisfied the debt in property,<sup>61</sup> such as land,<sup>62</sup> or that it has been satisfied by levy on his property,<sup>63</sup> or by a judicial sale under a decree enforcing a judgment for the secured debt<sup>64</sup> unless the sale is ineffectual<sup>65</sup> or unless the surety by his subsequent conduct loses the benefit of such payment.<sup>66</sup>

The giving of a nonnegotiable note secured by a mortgage has been held insufficient to constitute payment.<sup>67</sup>

e. Part Payments

A surety who has paid any part of the indebtedness can maintain an action for the amount paid.

A surety who has paid any part of the indebtedness can maintain an action for the amount paid.<sup>68</sup> The right is not affected by the intent with which such partial payment was made<sup>69</sup> or by the fact that the principal paid a part of the indebtedness and that, on payment of the balance by the surety, he took an assignment of the claim against the principal.<sup>70</sup> Several suits may be brought if the surety is obliged to make several payments.<sup>71</sup> sold on execution for the principal's debt, acquire title thereto unless the surety permits such purchase even though in fraud of his creditors. A surety may purchase his principal's property at an execution sale although the execution is against them jointly.

If property of the surety is sold on execution for the debt of the principal, the latter, by buying it, cannot acquire title thereto<sup>72</sup> unless the surety permits such purchase even though in fraud of his own creditors;<sup>73</sup> and if there are two or more principals a purchase by one of them inures to the benefit of the surety.<sup>74</sup> It is competent, however, for a surety to purchase the property of his principal at an execution sale although the execution is against them jointly.<sup>75</sup>

§.311. Contribution between Surety and Principal

The right of a principal to compel contribution by a surety as a cosurety is discussed infra § 353.

§ 312. Enforcement against Principal of Execution against Surety

Payment of the debt by a surety operates as an assignment of the judgment rendered against him and his principal, and the execution may be continued for his use against his principal.

Payment of the debt by a surety operates as an assignment of the judgment rendered against him and his principal, and the execution may be continued for his use against his principal<sup>76</sup> provided he makes it appear to the court that he is merely a surety<sup>77</sup> and that he actually paid the execution.<sup>78</sup>

Under a statute so providing, a surety who has been compelled to pay a judgment rendered against him and his principal, or any part thereof, is entitled to have execution thereof against his principal.<sup>79</sup>

§ 313. Rights of Surety against Estate of Principal

Ordinarily a surety's right of action against the estate of a deceased principal accrues when the surety pays the debt; but after maturity of the debt or accrual of liability the surety, even though he has not paid or been troubled by the creditor, may, in equity, compel payment of the debt from the principal's estate.

Ordinarily, where one is surety for another for the payment of a debt, and the latter has died, the right of action by the surety against his estate accrues at the time of the payment by the surety.<sup>80</sup> However, after maturity of the debt or accrual of liability, the surety, although he has not been troubled by the creditor, has the right, before payment, to go into a court of equity, at any time, to compel payment of the debt from the estate of the principal.<sup>81</sup>

(1) Surety cannot summarily proceed at law to enforce by execution judgment which has been rendered against principal and surety and which has been paid by surety and has been assigned to him; such execution can be quashed on motion.—First Nat. Bank v. Barrett, 94 S. W.2d 928, 230 Mo.App. 1196.

(2) Summary remedies generally see infra § 337.

Judgment paid by debtor secondarily liable

However, it has been held that judgment paid by debtor secondarily liable will not sustain execution for his benefit against property of debtor primarily liable.—Greenbrier Valley Bank v. Holt, 171 S.E. 906, 114 W.Va. 363.

Right as against administrator or widow's exemption

Where a landlord went security for a tenant on notes given by the latter for an implement, under an agreement that it should belong to the landlord until the tenant paid for it, and, on the death of the tenant, the landlord had to pay the notes, he was not entitled to the implement either as against the administrator or the widow's claim for exemption.—Bower v. Repsher, 2 Walk, Pa., 387.

Superior right of heir's assignee

Assignee of interest of heir in estate was held entitled to superior right over that of surety of such heir, as administrator to have distributed to surety share of heir in estate, in reimbursement for sums which surety had been compelled to pay for heir's misuse of funds and property of estate.—U. § 314. Duty to Indemnify Surety

The duty of the principal to indemnify the surety before payment or satisfaction by the latter of the principal debt or obligation is discussed supra §§ 301-305, and after such payment or satisfaction, supra §§ 306-310.

§ 315. Express Contract for Indemnification or Reimbursement

- a. In general
- b. Consideration
- c. Construction

a. In General

The validity of a contract by a principal to indemnify or reimburse his surety is governed by the rules applicable to contracts generally. Valid contracts of this nature will be enforced in accordance with their terms.

Since, as discussed infra § 317, a principal is bound to indemnify without express contract, a contract by him to indemnify his surety against loss requires only general language;<sup>82</sup> and valid contracts of this nature will be enforced in accordance with their terms;<sup>83</sup> but a surety making a payment or incurring a loss in circumstances outside the terms of the indemnity contract cannot recover thereon.<sup>84</sup> An indemnity contract executed by an employee to a surety as part of the consideration for writing the employee's bond, and including an agreement to hold the surety harmless from loss, in addition to an agreement to repay any money paid out by the surety, has been held not void as against public policy.<sup>85</sup>

Acceptance of offer. Where an indemnity agreement constituting an offer is not acted on by the surety within a reasonable time by executing a bond, there is no acceptance and the indemnitors are not bound.<sup>86</sup>

Severability of illegal portion. A contract by a principal to indemnify his surety is severable into its legal and its illegal portions,<sup>87</sup> and may be enforced as to the former.<sup>88</sup>

Particular provisions. A provision in such a contract that vouchers for payments made by the surety shall be conclusive between the parties<sup>89</sup> or prima facie evidence of the fact and extent of the principal's liability<sup>90</sup> is reasonable and valid, as are a provision that, on a failure to pay, when due, any of the notes on which the suretyship is based the surety shall have the right to declare the other notes due and proceed to enforce his security,<sup>91</sup> a stipulation for attorney's fees if the surety is compelled to sue the principal for reimbursement,<sup>92</sup> and a provision that a bonded employee agrees that in any accounting between him and the surety, the surety shall be entitled to credit for but receiver paid principal to new guardian, surety was entitled to compel bank or legal representative to pay interest on guardianship funds.—Fidelity & Deposit Co. of Maryland v. Deposit Guaranty Bank & Trust Co., 144 So. 700, 164 Miss. 286, 85 A.L.R. 860.

A provision that surety on official bond must exercise good faith in effecting settlement of claim against principal should be read into indemnity agreement, so as to sustain provision that any proper evidence of surety's payment of loss or damage shall be conclusive evidence against principal; a surety, failing to consult with principal about proposed settlements of personal injury claims against principal before concluding settlements, did not fulfill full duty under indemnity contract and could not recover indemnity from principal.—*Fidelity & Cas. any disbursements made to the employer in good faith under the belief that the surety was liable for the amount disbursed or that it was necessary or expedient to make such disbursements, whether or not such liability, necessity, or expediency existed.<sup>93</sup>

Signature by another. A principal on a surety bond which was signed for him by another as his attorney is estopped to deny liability to the surety on the ground that he had not signed the bond or authorized anyone to sign it for him, where, shortly after the bond was filed, a sworn report of sale was filed in which he stated that he had furnished a surety bond.<sup>94</sup>

Effect of failure to read. One signing an application for a bond cannot avoid personal liability under the indemnity clause, in the absence of fraud on the part of the surety, despite the applicant's failure to read the clause,<sup>95</sup> especially where he filled in the blanks and no agent of the surety participated in doing so.<sup>96</sup>

b. Consideration

The sufficiency of consideration for a principal's contract to indemnify his surety is governed by the rules applicable to consideration for contracts generally.

In accordance with the rules governing consideration for contracts generally, forbearance by the surety from withdrawing from the suretyship contract is sufficient consideration to support a contract of indemnity by the principal against loss thereon by the surety,<sup>97</sup> and an agreement by a surety on a contractor's bond, on assignment of the contract, to continue on the bond is sufficient.<sup>98</sup> A promise by a surety to his principal to pay the outstanding debt is a good consideration for an express promise by the principal to pay the surety a like sum on demand.<sup>99</sup>

Execution of bond before application signed. A bond, even though executed prior to the signing of an application therefor whereby the principal agrees to indemnify the surety, is a valid consideration for the indemnifying agreement.<sup>1</sup>

c. Construction

The construction of an express contract of a principal to reimburse or indemnify his surety is governed by the rules relating to the construction of contracts generally and indemnity contracts particularly; so, such agreements are to be construed so as to effectuate the parties' intent.

The rules relating to the construction of contracts generally, as discussed in Contracts §§ 294-372, and of indemnity contracts in particular, as discussed in Indemnity §§ 8-19, are applicable in construing express contracts of principals to reimburse or indemnify their sureties.<sup>2</sup> Such agreements must be construed to give effect to the intent of the parties<sup>3</sup> and to accomplish the purposes

Individuals bound by company application

Under agreement by construction company and interested individuals indemnifying surety, application by construction company for bond was held sufficient to bind individual indemnitors.—American Surety Co. of

in view,<sup>4</sup> and all the attendant circumstances must be considered.<sup>5</sup> They are to be construed so as to impose on the surety the obligation of acting in good faith<sup>6</sup> and in the exercise of a reasonable discretion,<sup>7</sup> and so as to give due effect to each and every part thereof, according to the intention of the parties at the time;<sup>8</sup> and, where the operative words of the agreement are clear and unambiguous, they cannot be controlled by an erroneous recital.<sup>9</sup>

The rule, discussed in Contracts § 298, that, when two or more papers are executed at the same time or at different times as part of the same transaction, they will be read together, has been applied in construing indemnity agreements between principal and surety.<sup>10</sup>

It has been said that, in view of the implied obligation of the principal to indemnify or reimburse the surety, as discussed infra § 316, an express agreement therefor adds nothing to the surety's rights,<sup>11</sup> and that, where a statute requires a principal to reimburse a surety who has satisfied the principal obligation or any part thereof, an express agreement by the principal to indemnify, and keep indemnified, the surety becomes material only if it entitles the surety to indemnify without his first satisfying any part of the principal obligation;<sup>12</sup> but the obligations of one signing applications for supersedeas bonds to reimburse the sureties thereon are to be ascertained from the terms of his application.<sup>13</sup>

Construction against surety. Where the agreement by the principal to indemnify the surety is drawn by the surety, it must be strictly construed,<sup>14</sup> and if there are any doubts as to its meaning, they must be resolved against him.<sup>15</sup> Where, under the terms of an indemnity agreement contained in an application for a faithful-performance bond, the principal is in the position of a guarantor to the surety, the agreement will be strictly construed in favor of the principal.<sup>16</sup>

Amendment of agreement. Where an indemnity agreement provides that it cannot be changed or modified except by a specified officer, a letter from an adjuster of the surety is not efficacious to amend the contract by waiver or otherwise.<sup>17</sup>

Particular provisions. A clause in the suretyship contract making vouchers or other evidence of payment by the surety conclusive evidence of the principal's liability to the surety is to be strictly construed in the light of all the facts with the end in view of doing justice between the parties,<sup>18</sup> and,

Payment of purported loss on fraudulent proof

Where principal agreed to indemnify surety company for losses which surety might "sustain, incur or become liable for in consequence of said bond" and agreed that "any proper evidence of the payment by the company of any such losses" should be conclusive evidence against principal of the fact and extent of his liability to surety, the latter provision was limited to losses for which surety actually became liable and did not make principal liable where there was no proof of loss or damage on part of surety, but surety paid purported loss on basis of fraudulent proof of loss.—London & Lancashire Indemnity Co. v. Crook, 6 N.W.2d 681, 241 Wis. 571, 144 A.L.R. 513.

while it is applicable to determine the extent of liability of the principal to the surety,<sup>19</sup> it is not the basis for determining the surety's liability to the principal on another cause of action.<sup>20</sup>

Under an agreement of the principal to reimburse the surety for every kind of liability or loss sustained or incurred "by reason of the execution" of the bond by the surety, the liability or loss to the surety must be such as normally arises from the execution of the bond;<sup>21</sup> and the agreement cannot be held to apply to a liability which might be assumed by the surety without reason where none can exist in the present or in the near future,<sup>22</sup> or to a loss sustained otherwise than in the natural course of events.<sup>23</sup>

A provision in a contract, giving a surety company the right in its discretion to retain collateral deposited with it until its liability on account of the bond ceases, does not release it from failure to exercise due diligence as to the collateral.<sup>24</sup>

A provision giving the surety the right to retain special counsel is not incompatible with a request made by the surety, after being served in an action on the bond, that the principal furnish the surety with the name and address of the attorney whom the principal would retain to defend the surety in the action, with the understanding that the principal would save the surety harmless from any judgment which might be rendered against him.<sup>25</sup>

Where insolvency supervenes, a surety's claim of indemnity is postponed until payments in full are made to all claimants who are members of the class of creditors covered by the bond;<sup>26</sup> in such circumstances, equitable principles forbid the surety to secure indemnity by independent contract with the debtor at the expense of the creditor whose claim he has undertaken to secure.<sup>27</sup>

§ 316. Implied Contract for Indemnification or Reimbursement

- a. In general
- b. Bail

a. In General

In the absence of an express agreement, there is an implied contract that the principal will indemnify or reimburse the surety for any payment the latter may make to the creditor or any loss he may sustain in compliance with the suretyship contract. Under most authorities, this implied contract arises when the suretyship is made, and not when payment is made by the surety thereunder.

In the absence of an express agreement, there is, in a relationship of principal and surety, an implied contract that the principal will indemnify or reimburse the surety for any payment the latter may make to the creditor or any loss he may sustain in compliance with the contract of suretyship, and save the surety harmless.<sup>28</sup> This im-

Attorneys' fees

(1) Under indemnity agreement in executor's bond granting surety right to recover from principal for counsel fees "by reason or in consequence of his having executed said bond," the attorneys' fees expended by surety in his action against principal seeking recovery under the agreement were not recoverable; but surety was entitled to recover amount expended by him for attorneys' fees for purpose of appearing in opposition to a petition by an heir of the estate to set aside executor's final account, on proper proof of surety's good faith and the reasonableness of the fees paid.—U. S. Fidelity & Guaranty Co. v. Falk, 7 N.W.2d 398, 214 Minn. 138.

(2) Recovery of attorneys' fees in action against principal generally see infra § 335 d (3).

Costs of removing cause to federal court

Principal was held not liable for costs incurred by surety in attempting to remove cause involving suspensive appeal bonds from state to federal court, where there is no reason why surety's rights could not have been as fully protected in state court as in federal.—Succession of Barrow, 145 So. 262, 176 La. 42.

Particular constructions of phrase

(1) Under administrator's agreement to indemnify surety against any loss it might sustain by reason of execution of bonds to protect estate against loss arising out of conduct of coadministrators, surety, if called on to bear loss when execution issued against surcharged coadministratrix was returned unsatisfied, could look to administrator for indemnity.—In re Booker's Estate, 91 N.Y.S.2d 16, 195 Misc. 513.

The liability of the latter is made to depend upon the damage suffered by the surety because of the default of the principal, and it is but equitable, in circumstances where the surety has satisfied the principal's obligation, that the latter should reimburse the surety."—Pacific Indemnity Co. v. In Missouri

(1) When the surety signed the bond, this act created an existing cause of action contingent on the principal's default; an implied contract was then raised by law that the principal should indemnify the surety, and this implied contract took effect from the date of the surety's signing the bond, and not merely from the time he paid the money, the payment in such case relating to the inception of the implied liability.—Berry v. Ewing, 3 S.W. 877, 91 Mo. 395.

(2) However, it has also been held that an implied promise of the principal to pay arises in favor of the surety immediately on his payment of the debt of the principal.—Lincoln County v. El. I. Du Pont De Nemours & Co., 32 S.W.2d 292, 224 Mo.App. 1183.

31. U.S.—Scott v. Norton Hardware Co., C.C.A.Va., 54 F.2d 1047.

to indemnify the surety,<sup>32</sup> relates back to the time the contract was entered into by which the liability to pay was incurred,<sup>33</sup> and matures the cause of action.<sup>34</sup> Under other authority, however, an implied promise on the part of the principal to reimburse the surety arises in favor of the latter through, or immediately on, his payment of the debt.<sup>35</sup>

Expenses incurred by surety without principal's fault. Where the contingency against which the surety has contracted does not arise, and he sustains no damage and incurs no liability on account of the acts, neglect, or default of the principal, in the absence of an express contract of indemnity, the latter ought not to be charged with the payment of expenses incurred by the surety in an action brought by a third person.<sup>36</sup>

b. Bail

- (1) In civil cases
- (2) In criminal cases

(1) In Civil Cases

The rule that the contract of suretyship implies a right in the surety to be indemnified by the principal obtains in the law of bail in civil cases.

The rule, stated supra subdivision a of this section, that the contract of suretyship implies a right in the surety to be indemnified or reimbursed by the principal obtains in the law of bail in civil cases;

es;<sup>37</sup> the principal in a recognizance executed in a civil case must indemnify his bail for any loss the latter may have sustained by reason of the breach of the undertaking.<sup>38</sup> However, such bail do not acquire any lien in equity on a tract of land for their indemnity,<sup>39</sup> even though the debt they have paid was for the price which the principal engaged to pay therefor.<sup>40</sup>

(2) In Criminal Cases

Under most authorities, the common law will not imply a contract on the part of a person bailed in a criminal case to indemnify his bail for what they have been compelled to pay on their recognizance by reason of his default; but the rule does not apply where cash bail is authorized.

Although there is authority to the contrary,<sup>41</sup> it is held at common law that, for reasons of public policy, the law will not imply a contract on the part of a person bailed in a criminal case to indemnify his bail for what they have been compelled to pay on their recognizance by reason of his default;<sup>42</sup> in jurisdictions where cash bail is authorized, however, the common-law rule does not apply,<sup>43</sup> and recovery may be had by the bail against accused<sup>44</sup> unless it was understood, at the time of deposit, that the money should be forfeited by non-appearance.<sup>45</sup>

- b. What may constitute
- c. Assignment as security
- d. Delivery or registration of security

a. In General

A principal may lawfully give security to his surety, whose liability to pay the principal's debt constitutes sufficient consideration for giving security.

The principal lawfully may give security to his surety; and agreements in respect thereto are valid,<sup>46</sup> although the liability of the surety is contingent and remote,<sup>47</sup> and for various obligations,<sup>48</sup> and it is uncertain which obligation covers, and which set of sureties is liable for, the principal's default.<sup>49</sup> So, the agreement is valid as to all parties, even though it does not specify of what the security consists<sup>50</sup> and some of the sureties do not know that a security has been given thereunder.<sup>51</sup>

Consideration. Where the surety has entered into his contract<sup>52</sup> or into a renewal thereof<sup>53</sup> in reliance on security to be given him, there is, according to one view, sufficient consideration for the giving of the security; there is, however, authority to the contrary.<sup>54</sup> So, after he has entered into the relationship, and before a breach, a surety's liability to pay the principal's debt constitutes a sufficient consideration for giving security.<sup>55</sup>

Money, notes, mortgages, a right of action, or other property, or a confession of judgment ordinarily may be placed in the hands of the surety for his protection.

Money,<sup>56</sup> notes,<sup>57</sup> mortgages,<sup>58</sup> security deeds,<sup>59</sup> a right of action,<sup>60</sup> or other property<sup>61</sup> ordinarily may be placed in the hands of the surety by the principal for the former's protection, and the principal may confess judgment in favor of the surety for that purpose.<sup>62</sup>

Money of a ward cannot, by agreement between a guardian and the surety on his bond, be held by the latter for his indemnity;<sup>63</sup> nor can the guardian and the surety under such an agreement control it jointly.<sup>64</sup> It is not, however, illegal for a guardian to deliver to his surety for the protection of the latter property of the ward, if there was no intention for the surety to use the property, and the guardian does not lose proper control over it.<sup>65</sup>

Where the surety on a contractor's bond in connection with a federal project would be subject to a certain maximum liability in an action pending against the surety and the contractor, the surety has been held to be entitled to have such maximum amount deposited in the registry of the federal court from funds payable to the contractors, to protect the surety against such action.<sup>66</sup>

c. Assignment as Security

Security to a surety may take the form of an assignment to him by his principal; what is covered by such an assignment is determined from the language thereof.

An assignment to a surety, to become effective on the date of the application for the bond, on the happening of any specified defaults under the contract, is one for security only.<sup>67</sup> An assignment by a principal of any moneys due or to become due under contracts covered by former or subsequent bonds executed by the surety, in the event of a claim or default, is a present assignment and not a mere promise to assign in the future.<sup>68</sup> The question as to what is covered by an assignment, as security, to a surety on default of the principal is to be determined, not by general equitable principles,<sup>69</sup> but by a consideration of the language of the assignment itself;<sup>70</sup> a surety releasing his claim on any part of the funds so assigned loses his right thereto.<sup>71</sup>

A surety to whom a defaulting trustee's beneficial interest in an estate is assigned takes it subject to the payment of the expense of an audit necessitated by the trustee's known defalcations.<sup>72</sup>

Where the principal assigns to the surety all payments due the principal from the obligee, and appoints the surety his agent to collect payments and make a full release, the surety becomes a pledgee whose character is that of a trustee for the principal to pay the debt and pay over the surplus,<sup>73</sup> and the surety may not so deal with the trust property as to destroy or even impair its value.<sup>74</sup>

d. Delivery or Registration of Security

Where title to security is transferred to the surety, immediate delivery thereof may not be necessary; but if the security requires registration, and registration is not had, the surety cannot hold it against subsequent bona fide purchasers.

Where the title to the security is transferred by the principal to the surety, immediate delivery thereof may not be necessary;<sup>75</sup> but if the security is of the kind which requires registration, and reg-

What law governs validity

The validity of assignments to contractor's surety of moneys due and to become due to contractor under Ohio contracts in event of default on former or subsequent bonds executed by surety was governed by laws of Ohio.—In re Allied Products Co., C.C.A.Ohio, 134 F.2d 725, certiorari denied Barnett v. Maryland Casualty Co., 64 S.Ct. 40, 320 U.S. 740, 88 L.Ed. 438, and Continental Casualty Co. v. Barnett, 64 S.Ct. 59, 320 U.S. 740, 88 L.Ed. 438.

69. U.S.—Maryland Casualty Co. v. Lacy, C.C.A.N.C., 46 F.2d 409.

70. U.S.—Maryland Casualty Co. v. Lacy, supra.

Retained percentage

(1) Retained percentage covered by assignment to contractor's surety on default, and applicable by surety to losses sustained on other contracts, was percentage computed on entire contract price, exclusive of final payment; under contract between contractor and surety, certain per cent of monthly estimates was to be withheld regardless of who completed contract, and this was amount covered by assignment.—Maryland Casualty Co. v. Lacy, supra.

(2) Priority in retained percentage see infra § 318.

Default following performance

Where contractor agreed that in event of claim or default in connection with any former or subsequent bonds executed by surety for contractor all payments due or to become due should be paid to surety such covenant to operate as an assignment, the right of surety to moneys due on contracts fully performed by contractor did not terminate, but continued where contractor defaulted on a third contract with another which surety was required to make good.—In re Allied Products Co., C.C.A.Ohio, 134 F.2d 725, certiorari denied Barnett v.

71. U.S.—Maryland Casualty Co. v. Lacy, C.C.A.N.C., 46 F.2d 409.

Retained percentage

In computing under contract "retained percentage" which, under assignment, surety could apply on losses from other contracts, amounts retained by highway commission and later released by surety should be excluded, in the absence of a showing that they were used in completing particular contract; but surety was entitled to hold, and apply as part of "retained percentage," amount released to be paid into fund which was being paid out under joint direction of company and contractor for completion of contract.—Maryland Casualty Co. v. Lacy, supra.

istration is not had, the surety cannot hold it as against subsequent bona fide purchasers.<sup>76</sup> Where title to property passes directly from the seller to the surety for the purchaser, the latter's rights are superior to those of a subsequent purchaser of the principal, even though the security was not registered.<sup>77</sup>

Payment of cash to an agent of the surety, as collateral, is sufficient to show the surety's possession thereof,<sup>78</sup> whether or not the agent actually turned the money over to the surety.<sup>79</sup>

§ 318. — Rights as against Third Persons

A surety's right to security given him by his principal is superior to secret equities of third persons, to subsequent liens, and to rights subsequently accruing; but he cannot retain security as against prior attaching creditors, against prior liens unless the holders thereof delay enforcement of their claims, or against those acquiring rights under a prior contract with the principal.

tors,<sup>86</sup> and other creditors.<sup>87</sup> However, the sureties cannot retain security as against prior liens unless the holders thereof delay the enforcement of their claims,<sup>88</sup> or against prior attaching creditors,<sup>89</sup> or against those acquiring rights under a prior contract with the principal.<sup>90</sup>

Where the security is notes, the sureties can bring suit thereon;<sup>91</sup> but this rule does not apply where the principal has paid the debt.<sup>92</sup>

Where the principal has transferred control of his property to a trustee for indemnity of the surety, the latter cannot hold the trustee to a greater liability than he undertook to assume.<sup>93</sup>

Under agreement to transfer. As against all persons having notice, a surety becoming such on an agreement of the principal to transfer certain stock certificates as collateral security has an enforceable equity therein.<sup>94</sup>

Retained percentage. As against general creditors of the principal, a surety has priority in the percentage of the contract price retained by the owner in a building or construction contract to secure performance of the contract.<sup>95</sup>

§ 319. — Application of Security

- a. In general
- b. Application to particular debts or liabilities

a. In General

A surety holding security is entitled to have it applied in satisfaction of the debt for the amount for which he is actually liable; where he acts with reasonable prudence and in the utmost good faith, and applies his security judiciously in discharge of the principal's liability, the latter has no ground for complaint.

A surety holding security from his principal is entitled to have it applied in satisfaction of the debt<sup>96</sup> for the amount for which he is actually liable;<sup>97</sup> and he is entitled to retain the profits also of any such security as incident to it until he is discharged from liability.<sup>98</sup> Where the surety has acted with reasonable prudence and in the utmost good faith,<sup>99</sup> and has applied his security judiciously in discharge of the liability of the principal,<sup>1</sup> the latter has no ground for complaint.

b. Application to Particular Debts or Liabilities

- (1) In general
- (2) Renewal or new obligation

(1) In General

Security given to indemnify a surety against liability on a particular debt or obligation cannot be applied to claims arising out of different obligations; nor can a surety appropriate security to his own debts.

Where security is given to indemnify a surety against liability on a particular debt or obligation, he cannot apply it to claims arising out of different obligations.<sup>2</sup> A surety cannot appropriate security to his own debts,<sup>3</sup> and should apply it in extinguishing his claims for payments in the order in which they were made.<sup>4</sup>

Security against liability on a note to be discounted at a particular bank is enforceable, although the note is discounted at a different bank.<sup>5</sup>

(2) Renewal or New Obligation

Unless rights of innocent third persons would be infringed, security given sureties covers renewals of the debts by them, and new notes given by them to raise money to pay the original indebtedness; and security may apply to obligations substituted by the surety for the original one or to a new bond given by the principal.

Security given to sureties covers renewals of the debts by them,<sup>6</sup> and new notes given to them to raise money with which to pay the original indebtedness,<sup>7</sup> unless the rights of innocent third persons are infringed thereby.<sup>8</sup> The security, by its express terms, may apply to obligations substituted by the sureties for the original one.<sup>9</sup> Likewise, security to indemnify sureties on a bond applies to a new bond given by the principal.<sup>10</sup> However, security given to a firm does not cover new notes given by the principal and indorsed after the death of one partner by the surviving partners individually, since the security was not given or intended for their individual benefit.<sup>11</sup>

A parol agreement that a mortgage indemnifying the sureties on one note could be used as a lien to indemnify such sureties on a second note, after the first note was paid, gives the sureties no rights to the lien of the mortgage.<sup>12</sup>

Where the indemnity is executed by a third person, it has been held that the security does not cover a renewal as between the original parties.<sup>13</sup> Some authorities, however, do not thus distinguish between cases where the indemnity is executed by a

§ 320. — Application of Excess

Other creditors of the principal are entitled to the benefit of any excess of security over the principal's debt for which the surety is liable, unless the principal has instructed him to pay such excess to others.

The surety is accountable for any excess of the security delivered to him over the amount he has paid on the debt, as discussed infra § 321 a, and other creditors of the principal are entitled to the benefit of any excess of security over the debt of the principal for which the surety is liable,<sup>15</sup> unless the principal has instructed the surety to pay such excess to others.<sup>16</sup>

§ 321. — Surrender and Accounting

- a. In general
- b. Actions

a. In General

A surety holding security of the principal is obliged to return it only where circumstances make it improper for him to retain it, as where he is released or discharged, or the agreement as to the security requires such return or is void.

A surety is under no obligation to return security placed in his hands by the principal until he is discharged from liability to the obligee,<sup>17</sup> or until the provisions of a contract governing the conditions under which return is to be made have been complied with,<sup>18</sup> or until demand has been made,<sup>19</sup> or at least until he has notice of facts making return mandatory.<sup>20</sup>

If, however, the surety has sufficient of principal's money with which to pay the debt,<sup>21</sup> and which may be used for that purpose,<sup>22</sup> or if the surety is released or discharged for any cause,<sup>23</sup> or if the agreement in respect of the security is void,<sup>24</sup> the principal is entitled to a return of the security, and can compel an accounting by the surety, or by third persons wrongfully in possession thereof,<sup>25</sup> or can bring an action in tort for its conversion.<sup>26</sup> So, where a bond does not become operative as an obligation, because of the nonoccurrence of a happening which is a condition precedent, the intended principal may recover from the surety collateral deposited with him;<sup>27</sup> and, where certain security is deposited with the surety on condition that security previously deposited be released, the surety is not entitled to retain the second deposit after he has refused to release the first.<sup>28</sup>

Where he has paid the debt, the surety must account for any excess of the security over the amount paid,<sup>29</sup> since there is an implied promise

As between principal and guarantor of surety. Where a surety failed to give his principal credit for a sum of money received, and, after paying the bond of the principal on which he was liable, claimed and received from a guarantor of such bond the full amount paid, in an action by the principal against the surety the principal cannot recover such sum, since the surety is liable to the guarantor therefor.<sup>36</sup>

(1) In general

(2) Charges and credits on accounting

(1) In General

General rules apply in an action by a principal against his surety for an accounting of property placed in the latter's hands as security, or of assumpsit for its return.

In accordance with the general rules governing civil actions, where, on abandonment of a contract by the contractor, his surety assumes the contract and takes over materials, moneys, and equipment, the contractor has an action in assumpsit for money had and received for any excess over that needed to complete the work,<sup>37</sup> even though a bill in equity for an accounting will lie.<sup>38</sup> Where a bill in equity against a contractor's surety by the contractor's assignee for the benefit of creditors, for an accounting, is based on an indemnity agreement, and only incidentally involves the bond, the suit will not be dismissed because the terms of the bond preclude suit after a date which has passed<sup>39</sup> or because of the fact that the contractor defaulted and abandoned the contract.<sup>40</sup> Such a bill has been held not dismissible because of the running of the ordinary statute of limitations as to particular items<sup>41</sup> or on the ground of laches, where the surety depended merely on lapse of time without any evidence to show prejudice from delay.<sup>42</sup>

It has been held that, unless a waiver by him protecting the principal from liability is filed, a surety is a necessary party in an action by the principal against his cosurety in order to adjust payments by him.<sup>43</sup>

General rules as to the admissibility<sup>44</sup> and weight and sufficiency<sup>45</sup> of evidence, and the burden of proof<sup>46</sup> apply.

The running of the ordinary statute of limitations as to such items would not necessarily bar the whole proceeding for an accounting, unless there were no other basis or claim in the bill which would affect the amount of loss.—Goff v. U. S. Fidelity & Guaranty Co., supra.

45. Permitting security to remain in insolvent bank

On issue whether loss on certificate of deposit, occasioned by insolvency of bank should fall on plaintiff or on surety who entered bail bond for plaintiff, who gave certificate as security, evidence was held not to show that surety negligently permitted certificate to remain in bank after its vice-president had knowledge that bank was of doubtful solvency.—Kosior v. National Surety Co., 171 A. 94, 112 Pa. Super. 390.

Evidence held sufficient

46. Applicability to particular liability

In resisting surrender of security, the burden is on the surety to show

Where the complaint of the principal states that property was conveyed to secure the surety after he became such, there is not a fatal variance because the evidence shows that it was before he became surety.<sup>47</sup>

The giving or refusal of instructions is controlled by the usual principles applicable in the form of action employed.<sup>48</sup>

(2) Charges and Credits on Accounting

In taking the account, the surety is entitled to credit for all reasonable disbursements by him arising out of the relationship; he may be held responsible for the profits of the property, but not for losses not fairly imputable to him.

In taking the account with respect to security, the surety is entitled to be credited with all reasonable disbursements by him arising out of the relationship.<sup>49</sup> Reasonable amounts paid as counsel fees or other expenses are to be credited to him,<sup>50</sup> and he will be allowed interest on money paid by him in discharge of encumbrances on the property,<sup>51</sup> unless it would be inequitable to allow such interest.<sup>52</sup> The value of property placed in his possession will be taken as of the time it was transferred to him,<sup>53</sup> and the surety has been held responsible for its profits,<sup>54</sup> but he is not chargeable with losses not fairly imputable to him.<sup>55</sup>

Claim of surety not party to action. In a suit by the principal against a surety for an accounting for property transferred to him to secure him and a cosurety, enough of the amount found due the principal to cover an amount paid by the cosurety should be held in abeyance until the latter's claim is settled or adjudicated.<sup>56</sup>

§ 322. Rights as to Consideration for Undertaking

A surety who has received a consideration is entitled to retain it without accounting for it.

Where a surety has received something as a consideration, he is entitled to retain it without accounting for it.<sup>57</sup> Likewise, if he has incurred liability on the promise of consideration he can bring suit to recover it,<sup>58</sup> even though his undertaking has not resulted in the benefit expected from it by his principal.<sup>59</sup>

§ 323. Actions and Proceedings

Apart from express contract, a surety's action against his principal for indemnification or reimbursement is on the contract implied by law, and, under most authorities, cannot be maintained on the principal claim or evidence of indebtedness. The form of the action is assumpsit, but in a proper case the remedy may be in equity.

The right of a surety to recover from his principal the amount which he has paid in the latter's behalf is a right which may be established in a court of law.<sup>60</sup> In the absence of an express contract, an action by the surety against his principal for indemnification or reimbursement is brought on the contract implied by law,<sup>61</sup> though an express conthat a mortgage was intended to secure him not only on a bail bond executed when the mortgage was assigned to him, but on others that it might be necessary to give in the proceedings.—Smith v. Wigler, 65 A. 900, 72 N.J.Eq. 559, reversed on other grounds 70 A. 186, 74 N.J.Eq. 435.

tract of indemnity between the surety and the principal does not preclude a suit on the implied contract.<sup>62</sup> Although there is some authority to the contrary,<sup>63</sup> the surety's action cannot, under most authorities, be maintained on the principal claim or evidence of indebtedness.<sup>64</sup> The fact that there has been a formal assignment of the judgment<sup>65</sup> or execution<sup>66</sup> in the creditor's action does not prevent the surety from maintaining his suit for reimbursement.

paid,<sup>68</sup> and, although a contrary view has been taken,<sup>69</sup> it has been held that an action for money had and received will not lie.<sup>70</sup> A surety cannot declare in tort for the purpose of evading the bankruptcy laws.<sup>71</sup>

The claim for reimbursement has been held a purely legal one, enforceable only by action at law, in the absence of special circumstances;<sup>72</sup> the remedy, however, may be by bill in equity in a proper case,<sup>73</sup> as where the surety on a joint obligation seeks to recover from the estate of a de-

Open account

Where surety paid half of note, remedy for recovering from principal the amount paid was not limited to action on note, and surety could sue individually on open account to recover amount paid.—Gay v. Powell, 53 S.E.2d 581, 79 Ga.App. 288.

Two causes of action on note

(1) Where surety on a note pays the obligation, a cause of action on the note or on the implied obligation of the principal to reimburse the surety arises, and one cause of action may remain enforceable even though the other has become barred.—In re Seigel, D.C.Ga., 43 F.Supp. 778.

(2) Where two sureties discharge note on default of principal, each paying one half of the face amount of note, they may bring joint action on note against principal or each may sue principal separately, not on the note, but on implied promise of principal to reimburse them.—Gay v. Powell, 53 S.E.2d 581, 79 Ga.App. 288—Lamis v. Callianos, 194 S.E. 923, 57 Ga.App. 238.

(3) Ostensible coprincipal on note, actually surety, may, after paying amount due from principal, recover it in suit against principal, either on note after transfer or on obligation of principal arising otherwise.—Campbell v. Rybert, 167 S.E. 924, 46 Ga.App. 461.

In Texas

(1) The question has been one of great difficulty to the courts of the state.—Fox v. Kroeger, 35 S.W.2d 679, 119 Tex. 511, 77 A.L.R. 663.

(2) Where a surety pays the debt of his principal, he has his election to either pursue his legal remedies and bring an action in assumpsit, or to prosecute an action on the debt itself.—Fox v. Kroeger, 35 S.W.2d 679, 119 Tex. 511, 77 A.L.R. 663, overruling Faires v. Cockerell, 31 S.W. 190, 88 Tex. 428, 28 L.R.A. 528—City Nat. Bank of Houston v. Moody, Civ.App., 115 S.W.2d 745, error dismissed.—Self v. Thompson, Civ. App., 35 S.W.2d 245.

(3) This rule applies with equal force to all debts whether or not represented by a negotiable instrument.—Fox v. Kroeger, 35 S.W.2d 679, 119 Tex. 511, 77 A.L.R. 663—Self v. Thompson, Civ.App., 35 S.W.2d 245.

(4) Surety purchasing note to avoid being sued thereon, with intention to sue principal for amount thereof, had such right.—Lewis v. Hasley, Civ.App., 34 S.W.2d 376.

(2) Rights of accommodating against accommodated party to note generally see Bills and Notes § 750.

In Missouri

(1) A surety who has paid the note on which he was surety must, at law, base his action on the implied promise and not on the original obligation.—Kelley v. Briggs, App., 290 S.W. 105—Van Hoose v. Southwestern Mach. Co., 154 S.W. 165, 169 Mo.App. 54.

Surety making part payment of debt may, when debt is due, sue ceased principal,<sup>74</sup> and a surety whose right to exoneration is only equitable must sue in equity.<sup>75</sup>

Time to sue and limitations. The limitation of time set forth in a bond issued by a surety does not apply in an action by him under an agreement of the principal to indemnify the surety.<sup>76</sup> Where a surety on a note brings suit against the principal alleging payment, but fails to prove payment or that the action had accrued before the institution of the suit, a demurrer to his evidence on the ground that the action was prematurely brought is properly sustained.<sup>77</sup> Under an express contract to indemnify the surety, the surety, when impleaded in a concurso proceeding, has been held to have a right of action against the indemnitor even though the surety has not yet sustained actual loss or damage.<sup>78</sup>

The requirement of payment by the surety before a right of action for reimbursement arises or an action may be brought is discussed supra §§ 301, 309.

Finding. In an action for money paid in settlement of a claim on the fidelity bond of a bank president, the finding of the trial court that the receiver of the bank first learned of the loss claimed under the bond on or about a certain day is a finding as to when the bank learned of the loss.<sup>79</sup>

A surety for a receiver, on an allowance of compensation for the receiver's services, is entitled to petition the court to have such amount as he paid under the bond applied to his indemnity for what he has paid out for the receiver,<sup>80</sup> but the surety may claim no allowance as compensation to the receiver on a part of the fund which was wrongfully misappropriated.<sup>81</sup>

A surety paying a note and receiving it from payee with payee's indorsement thereon could sue maker in a court of equity on theory of indemnity, but such right was not exclusive of any other right which surety might have in a court of law.—Rechtine v. Weis, 2 Ohio Supp. 380.

§ 324. — Jurisdiction and Venue

A question of jurisdiction is to be determined as of the time when the surety makes the payment giving rise to his cause of action.

A question of jurisdiction is to be determined as of the time when the surety makes the payment giving rise to his cause of action against the principal.<sup>82</sup> Where the trial court had jurisdiction of the subject matter and parties in an action in which separate judgments were rendered, and error proceedings were not prosecuted, whether the trial court had authority to render separate judgments is immaterial on the question of an alleged surety's right to reimbursement from the principal.<sup>83</sup>

The general rules as to the nature or subject of an action as fixing venue are discussed in the C.J.S. title Venue §§ 6-78, also 67 C.J. p 24 note 5—p 94 note 80.

with plaintiff, and not a principal,<sup>85</sup> although plaintiff actually supposed that defendant was a principal;<sup>86</sup> and, in a suit for reimbursement by the assignee of a surety who had paid the debt, the principal may rely on any defense he may have had against the surety.<sup>87</sup> A principal who has a good defense against the creditor, but fails to avail himself of it in a joint action against him and the surety, cannot set it up in a subsequent action for indemnity by the surety who paid the judgment in the former suit,<sup>88</sup> and it is no defense in an action by a surety who has been compelled to pay a judgment in a replevin action in a suit on the replevin bond that the principal was not served in the latter suit.<sup>89</sup> The fact that misleading information was furnished to the principal by his secretary acting for the principal and not for the surety is not available as a defense to an action by the surety on an indemnity agreement.<sup>90</sup>

In action to compel principal to pay debt, the defense that the creditor may, by reason of his laches, lose his right of action against the surety is not available.<sup>91</sup>

Indemnity bond. In an action on a bond executed by the principal to the surety to secure the latter for payments made on the suretyship obligation, it is no defense that the surety executed his policy of indemnity to the assignee of the obligee in the original transaction instead of to the obligee himself;<sup>92</sup> nor is the fact that plaintiff-surety company thereafter transferred its assets to another company which assumed its liabilities and lent plaintiff money to fulfill its obligations.<sup>93</sup>

Estoppel. The fact that the principal has, in an action brought by the obligee, assisted the surety in defending against a liability not imposed by the suretyship contract does not estop him to assert his nonliability thereunder in a subsequent action by the surety against the principal.<sup>94</sup>

Novation. In an action by an employee's bondsman to recover from the employee the amount which plaintiff paid to the employer for a shortage in the employee's account, an alleged novation between the employer and the employee has been held not usable as a defense.<sup>95</sup>

Failure to take charge of litigation. The right of a surety on a replevin bond to recover from his principal the amount paid thereon by the surety is not affected by his failure to take charge of the litigation and keep the principal informed as to the progress thereof.<sup>96</sup>

b. Incapacity of Principal

Where the contract secured may be avoided for incapacity of the principal, he may defeat the surety's action founded on an implied contract for reimbursement; but if an infant is bound for the original debt, his surety may recover for reimbursement.

Where the original contract secured may be avoided on the ground of incapacity of the principal, he may defeat an action by the surety founded on an implied contract for reimbursement;<sup>97</sup> but if an infant is bound for the original debt, however, his surety may recover for reimbursement.<sup>98</sup>

c. Nonexecution of Contract by Principal

A surety cannot recover from the principal where the latter did not execute the contract, unless he is liable without having done so.

A surety cannot recover from the principal where the latter did not execute the contract,<sup>99</sup> as where the name of the latter was signed without authority,<sup>1</sup> unless the principal is liable without having executed the contract.<sup>2</sup>

d. Illegality

Although the rule is different if the surety had no knowledge of the taint of illegality,<sup>3</sup> where a surety pays, knowing of facts which render the transaction illegal, such payment is a voluntary one, and no recovery can be had from the principal,<sup>4</sup> even though the surety was compelled to pay in another jurisdiction.<sup>5</sup> So, sureties cannot recover from their principal where their agreement is illegal, although the contract between the principal and the creditor is perfectly legal and valid.<sup>6</sup> However, the fact that the transaction which necessitated the giving of the contract of suretyship was illegal will not make the contract itself illegal.<sup>7</sup>

In an action by a surety against his principal to recover money paid on a bond conditioned on the latter's compliance with a statute, the principal's denial that he violated the statute presents no defense, where its effect is to deny the legality of the proceedings whereby the assessment was made against him which the surety was obliged to pay.<sup>8</sup> Likewise, a liquor licensee cannot resist enforcement of his agreement to indemnify the surety on his bond on the ground that proceedings to forfeit the bond were illegal and proceedings to review have been instituted, since until the order, which is not alleged to be void ab initio, is vacated, the surety is required to comply therewith.<sup>9</sup>

e. Payment, Satisfaction, and Release

Reimbursement or satisfaction by, or release of, the principal is a good defense in an action against him by the surety.

The principal can prove in his defense that he already has reimbursed his surety,<sup>10</sup> or facts which show a good defense by way of accord and satisfaction or as an executed compromise<sup>11</sup> and release.<sup>12</sup> Such a defense is not established, however, by a showing that the principal has transferred to his surety, in payment, notes which prove worthless;<sup>13</sup> and an agreement by the principal to convey to the surety a certain lot of land is not a defense if the agreement has not been complied with.<sup>14</sup>

Where one cosurety has paid the creditor, the principal cannot escape liability to him by showing payment to another cosurety,<sup>15</sup> and the liability of the principal is not affected by the fact that the surety who brings suit and who paid a debt has released a cosurety.<sup>16</sup>

§ 326. — Set-Off or Counterclaim

While a principal may have a valid counterclaim in a suit by the surety, he cannot offset as against the surety's claim a sum which he would be bound to repay to the surety if recovered.

A principal, in an action against him by a surety for reimbursement, may interpose a valid counterclaim held by him.<sup>17</sup> A principal cannot offset as against the surety's claim a sum which he would be bound to repay to the surety if recovered.<sup>18</sup> A claim of the principal against the surety on his notes, which might have been, but was not, litigated in the suit against both on the notes, resulting in a decree against them, which the surety paid, cannot, in the absence of a showing that the surety is insolvent, be used by the principal, in an injunction suit against the enforcement of an execution issued for the surety's use against the principal, to offset the amount of the decree in execution.<sup>19</sup>

§ 327. — Conclusiveness as against Principal of Adjudication against Surety

A judgment against a surety, with proof of payment by him, is prima facie evidence in an action to recover the amount from the principal.

A judgment against the surety, with proof of payment thereof by him, is competent prima facie evidence in an action to recover the amount from the principal.<sup>20</sup> A judgment against a surety is not binding on the principal who was not a party to the suit,<sup>21</sup> although it is otherwise where the principal had notice of the suit,<sup>22</sup> unless there was collusion between the creditor and the surety<sup>23</sup> or negligence by the latter.<sup>24</sup> On the other hand, where the judgment has been rendered against the principal as well as the surety, the former is concluded as to all matters actually determined against, or waived by, him;<sup>25</sup> and infancy,<sup>26</sup> want of consideration,<sup>27</sup> or illegality<sup>28</sup> cannot be pleaded by the principal in an action by the surety to recover the amount paid on such judgment.

The mere fact that the judgment is against the surety alone in an action against him and the principal has, however, been held not to preclude the surety, afterward in an action against the principal, from showing that the debt was that of the principal.<sup>29</sup>

§ 328. — Conditions Precedent

A statutory requirement that a surety paying a judgment must, in order to claim repayment or contribution by his principal, file a notice of payment and claim is mandatory.

A statutory requirement that a surety paying a judgment must, in order to claim a right of repayment or contribution by his principal, file a notice of such payment and claim with the clerk of the court where the judgment was rendered, within a specified time after payment, is mandatory.<sup>30</sup>

§ 329. — Parties

- a. In general
- b. Plaintiff
- c. Defendant

a. In General

The creditor is a proper party in a suit by a surety against his principal for exoneration.

In a suit by a surety against his principal for exoneration, the creditor, while he may not be a necessary party,<sup>31</sup> is at least a proper one,<sup>32</sup> that he may "be at hand to receive the money."<sup>33</sup> In a suit by a surety to enjoin its principal, a contractor, from disposing, or obtaining the balance, of moneys due under the contract, a bank which claims the money and holds a voucher therefor has been held an indispensable party.<sup>34</sup>

Parties in summary actions are discussed infra § 337, and actions by personal representatives of sureties, in Executors and Administrators § 710 f.

Reason for rule

In the controversy raised by the suit the bank has an interest of such a nature that a final decree cannot be made without affecting that interest; such a decree cannot properly be made in a suit to which one who is directly interested in resisting the granting of the relief sought therein is not a party.—Garretson v. National Surety Co., C.C.A. Fla., 63 F.2d 847, certiorari denied National Surety Co. v. Garretson, 54 S.Ct. 55, 290 U.S. 638, 78 L.Ed. 555.

the heirs and representatives of the principal made parties, the duty rests on such party to interplead them.<sup>35</sup>

b. Plaintiff

The action against the principal is properly brought by the surety making payment, and can be maintained only in his name. Sureties paying the debt cannot join as plaintiffs, but must sue separately, unless they are permitted to join by statute, or have made payment jointly.

The action against the principal is properly brought by the surety who makes the payment,<sup>36</sup> and can be maintained only in his own name.<sup>37</sup> At law sureties who have paid the debt cannot join as plaintiffs but must sue separately,<sup>38</sup> unless they are permitted to join by statute,<sup>39</sup> or have made payment jointly,<sup>40</sup> as where payment is made from a joint fund<sup>41</sup> or by a joint note.<sup>42</sup>

Cosureties who have not paid anything have no interest in the suit to recover back the amount paid by plaintiff.<sup>43</sup> So, it has been held that, if a suit is necessary to enforce securities, cosureties are not necessary parties thereto;<sup>44</sup> but the cosureties<sup>45</sup> and the creditor<sup>46</sup> are proper parties plaintiff in an action to compel the principal to pay the debt and exonerate the sureties.

c. Defendant

If the original liabilities of several principals are in distinct proportions, a separate action must be brought against each. When the surety proceeds in equity, all interested parties not complainants should be made defendants, and, where the debt is unpaid and the surety seeks exoneration or indemnity by such suit, the creditor must be a party.

Coobligors who are principals are jointly liable to their surety, as discussed supra § 307 c (2), but, if the original liabilities of several principals are in distinct proportions, a separate action must be brought against each one.<sup>47</sup> A surety who has paid a note and received contribution from a cosurety is not a necessary party to a suit by the latter against the principal for the amount contributed,<sup>48</sup> and so, where the surety has paid the debt, he may proceed against the principal or may subject a fund without making the creditor a party.<sup>49</sup>

In accordance with the well recognized general rule, as discussed in Equity § 133, when the surety proceeds in equity, all interested parties who are not complainants should be made defendants,<sup>50</sup> and, where the debt is unpaid and the surety seeks exoneration or indemnity by such suit, the creditor must be a party,<sup>51</sup> since the ultimate relief is, not to have the amount paid to the surety, but to the creditor.<sup>52</sup>

It must show affirmatively, by proper allegation, the facts disclosing a liability of the principal for which plaintiff surety was responsible,<sup>54</sup> and the fact of payment,<sup>55</sup> and should contain allegations showing the nature of the obligation,<sup>56</sup> whether the promise was in writing,<sup>57</sup> and the name of the payee;<sup>58</sup> but it is not necessary that the pleader use the precise words of the obligation,<sup>59</sup> words of equivalent meaning being sufficient.<sup>60</sup> In short, the petition should so state the facts of the claim sued on as to identify it so that the record without other aid would support a plea in bar of another suit between the same parties on the same claim.<sup>61</sup>

Where the surety's legal obligation to pay appears from the facts alleged in his pleading, in an action for reimbursement, he need not allege that the payment was made at defendant's request,<sup>62</sup> and, if the indebtedness paid by the surety was evidenced by a judgment, it is not necessary to set forth a copy of the judgment,<sup>63</sup> or to allege that the court rendering it was within the state and had jurisdiction;<sup>64</sup> and, in the absence of any exception to the general law of suretyship, a surety suing a principal for reimbursement need not allege that a judgment was obtained against the surety adjudicating the fact of the principal's default.<sup>65</sup>

The complaint has been held to be founded on the implied contract of indemnity, notwithstanding the original claim was based on a note which is shown to have been satisfied,<sup>66</sup> and although it is alleged that the surety procured a transfer of the claim by the creditor to himself.<sup>67</sup> In an action to enforce payment by the principal or other exoneration, the bill should allege that the debt is past due<sup>68</sup> and that the surety is liable on it.<sup>69</sup>

(2) In surety's action against principal to recover money paid on bond, averment that surety "was obliged to pay" was sufficiently definite statement of payment, word "was" being past indicative of "be" and indicating an accomplished fact.—Royal Indemnity Co. v. Gunzburg, 173 A. 438, 114 Pa.Super. 303. Oblique's acknowledgment of payment

good defense to the note in the hands of the original payee, and that plaintiff, with knowledge of such defense, voluntarily made such payment,<sup>71</sup> such contention being available only in a plea to the merits.<sup>72</sup> In an action by the surety to obtain reimbursement for the amount of the judgment paid by it, a merely defective statement of the fact of nonpayment by defendant to the surety of the amount paid by the latter is good when tested only by general demurrer.<sup>73</sup>

In order for a plea or affidavit of defense to be sufficient it must set up a defense to the cause of action alleged in plaintiff's pleadings.<sup>74</sup> A plea that defendant sued as maker of a note was in fact surety thereon to the knowledge of a cosurety presents a good defense to an action by such cosurety to recover the full amount of the note which he has paid.<sup>75</sup>

An amendment of the surety's pleading may be permitted in a proper case.<sup>76</sup> So, in a proceeding by a surety to foreclose a chattel mortgage of the principal, given to indemnify the surety, it has been held proper to permit an amendment crediting the mortgagor with a sum paid by the surety before maturity.<sup>77</sup> The allowance of an amended answer rests largely in the discretion of the trial court.<sup>78</sup>

b. Issues, Proof, and Variance

In actions by sureties against their principals the proof is confined to the issues raised by the pleadings, and a material variance between the pleadings and proof is fatal.

In accordance with the general rules of pleadings

in actions by sureties against their principals, the proof is confined to the issues raised by the pleadings.<sup>80</sup> The plea of "prescription and limitation," expressed in general terms, must be understood as applying to the time which had elapsed after the cause of action accrued as between plaintiff and defendant,<sup>81</sup> and under it defendant cannot raise the defense that the surety had not availed himself of the statute of limitations in the suit against him by the creditor.<sup>82</sup> Variance as to a note cannot arise in an action by a surety on the note for money paid to the use of the principal,<sup>83</sup> since the note itself is not declared on, as discussed supra § 323. The bill or complaint will not be dismissed for an immaterial variance,<sup>84</sup> but a material one is fatal.<sup>85</sup>

§ 331. — Evidence

- a. Presumptions and burden of proof
- b. Admissibility
- c. Weight and sufficiency

a. Presumptions and Burden of Proof

In an action by a surety against his principal, the surety has the burden of proving every fact essential to his right to recover. As in other civil actions the court will indulge in appropriate presumptions arising from the facts proved.

In an action by a surety against his principal, the surety has the burden of proving every fact essential to his right to recover.<sup>86</sup> Accordingly, the surety must show that he became such at the principal's request.<sup>87</sup> The burden is on him to show the relation, in an action in which his right to a particular recovery depends on his relation as surety to another as principal,<sup>88</sup> and, if the surety has paid voluntarily, he must show that the

In a suit for exoneration, a surety has the burden of proving that the principal, as the creditor's agent, made an oral contract conflicting with the surety's written obligation.

Putting up collateral security

One putting up stock as collateral security for another, which stock was applied on indebtedness by pledgee, was only required to show that putting up of the stock as collateral security was done with the knowledge or at the request of such other person.—Barger v. Gething, Ohio App., 52 N.E.2d 94.

debt was in fact recoverable.<sup>89</sup> The burden is on a former principal to show that the relation has been changed by the former surety's assuming the debt.<sup>90</sup> In an action for money paid, the surety should prove the original agreement by proof of the bond or other contract,<sup>91</sup> and, if the fact does not appear on the face of the instrument, he should show it by other means.<sup>92</sup>

On the other hand, the burden of proving affirmative defenses rests on defendant.<sup>93</sup> The burden of going forward with the evidence may shift from one side to the other as the case proceeds.<sup>94</sup>

Presumptions as to the nature of the liability on a note signed by two or more makers is discussed in Bills and Notes § 658.

Payment. A surety, in order to recover from a principal money paid, must prove that he has paid the debt or discharged the principal for the amount he seeks to recover.<sup>95</sup> A payment by the surety on the principal's account is presumed to be made at the request of the latter,<sup>96</sup> and to extinguish his liability to the creditor.<sup>97</sup> If it does not appear when the surety made payment, it will be presumed that it was at maturity of the debt,<sup>98</sup> and before he brought suit.<sup>99</sup> Where a surety pays a judgment and receives an assignment thereof, it will be presumed that such payment was made on the date of the assignment.<sup>1</sup> In the absence of evidence of a partnership or joint interest, the presumption is that, where two or more sureties have paid the debt of the principal, each fulfilled his duty by paying his own share.<sup>2</sup>

As against the principal, a surety is bound by the presumptive satisfaction of an execution arising from a previous levy on personal property belonging to the principal, and the burden is on him to destroy, by sufficient proof, the presumption of payment thus created.<sup>3</sup>

Partial payments before maturity are presumed to have been made by the principal rather than by the surety.<sup>4</sup>

Consideration. It is presumed, after forfeiture of bail bonds, that no further obligation to pay premiums or service charges thereon exists,<sup>5</sup> and, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, the presumption is that a consideration passed from the surety to a third person paying the obligation for him.<sup>6</sup>

Compliance with statutory provisions. In the absence of proof to the contrary, compliance by a foreign surety company with the laws of the state will be presumed.<sup>7</sup>

b. Admissibility

General rules governing the admissibility of evidence in civil actions have been applied in actions by sureties against their principals.

General rules have been applied in determining the admissibility of evidence in actions by a surety against his principal, as, for example, in determining the admissibility of evidence pertaining to the agreement of the parties,<sup>8</sup> payment or settlement of the obligation,<sup>9</sup> the principal's liability to

Purchase of lost instrument

Owner of lost stock certificate, who secured duplicate on filing proof of ownership and bond, was not liable to surety, which reserved right to secure discharge on default of owner and which purchased lost certificate when it reappeared, without proof that holder had title thereto, since owner was not in default unless surety became liable to holder of lost certificate on its presentation.—American Surety Co. of New York v. General rules governing the weight and sufficiency

10. Judgment of creditors against surety was held admissible in interpleader action between surety and principal's assignee to show principal's liability to surety.—Lincoln County v. E. I. Du Pont De Nemours & Co., 32 S.W.2d 292, 224 Mo.App. 1183.

11. Mont.—Leggat v. Palmer, 102 P. 327, 39 Mont. 302.
50 C.J. p 272 note 75.

Inducement to sign as surety

In action on open account to recover, among other things, an amount paid by creditor as surety on note of debtor, testimony by creditor that debtor told him that, if he would sign as surety, a certain other would sign as surety also was admissible.—Gay v. Powell, 53 S.E.2d 581, 79 Ga.App. 288.

Note deposited as collateral

In action on open account to recover, among other things, amount paid by creditor as surety on note of debtor, evidence respecting another note, deposited by creditor with payee of first note as collateral, was admissible over objection of irrelevancy and immateriality.—Gay v. Powell, 53 S.E.2d 581, 79 Ga.App. 288.

Financial ability; possession of funds

(1) In action by surety on bond of former sheriff to recover under indemnity clause for counsel fees and other expenses incurred in defending suit by county against former sheriff and the surety, court should have admitted testimony concerning former sheriff's financial ability at the time of the litigation by county against them.—Maryland Casualty Co. v. Cowherd, 145 S.W.2d 843, 284 Ky. 659.

(2) In action on bond to reimburse garnishment bondsman for attorney's fee paid to defend action on garnishment bond against debtor and bondsman jointly, evidence that debtor had funds to pay original judgment on which garnishment proceedings were based was held properly excluded as immaterial.—Coggin v. U. S. Fidelity & Guaranty Co., Tex.Civ.App., 100 S.W.2d 206, error dismissed.

Title of holder of lost certificate

In action by surety against owner of lost stock certificate which surety purchased on its reappearance, evidence that holder of lost certificate was innocent purchaser for value without notice was insufficient to establish title of holder under common law, which applied in absence of proof of law of situs of lost certificate at time of its transfer to prior holders.—American Surety Co. of New York v. Cunningham, 275 N.W. 1, 200 Minn. 566, 112 A.L.R. 892.

of evidence in civil actions have been applied in actions by sureties against their principals.

The rules determinative of the weight and sufficiency of evidence in civil actions generally have been applied in determining the weight and sufficiency of evidence in actions by sureties against their principals,<sup>16</sup> for example, with respect to the sufficiency of evidence to sustain findings<sup>17</sup> or to support a verdict<sup>18</sup> or judgment.<sup>19</sup>

Liability. The record of an action by the creditor is prima facie evidence, in a suit by the surety for reimbursement, of the liability of the surety and of the liability of the principal over to him.<sup>20</sup>

Suretyship and payment; parol evidence required

In action by surety on note against principal to recover amount paid by surety, findings as to suretyship and payment could not be based on note alone, but required parol evidence of the relationship of the parties and the circumstances attending the payment.—Henneke v. Strack, Mo.App., 101 S.W.2d 743.

Payment on demand by liquor board

Where control board revoked liquor license when licensee did not answer charges and his surety, on demand by board, paid penalty of bond, surety was prima facie entitled to indemnity, and licensee did not overcome effect of such proof by denial that he violated liquor law

Where the application for a bond provides that vouchers showing payment by the surety of any claim in connection with indemnity on behalf of applicant shall be conclusive evidence of the fact and amount of liability, a surety producing a voucher in a suit against the principal for reimbursement for money paid makes out a prima facie case,<sup>21</sup> and is entitled to recover from the principal where the latter makes no effort to rebut such prima facie case by proof of fraud or lack of good faith.<sup>22</sup> On the other hand, a surety's compromise with the creditor is only prima facie evidence of the principal's liability on the indemnifying agreement,<sup>23</sup> and cannot prevail against the principal's uncontradicted testimony denying all charges of guilt or irregularity.<sup>24</sup>

Payment. Possession by the surety of the note on which he was surety is prima facie evidence that he has paid it<sup>25</sup> and has not been repaid by the principal,<sup>26</sup> and the assignment to the surety of a judgment recovered by the creditor against the principal sufficiently shows that the surety paid the judgment in full;<sup>27</sup> on the other hand, possession of such a note by the principal is prima facie evidence of payment by him.<sup>28</sup> In particular cases the evidence has been held sufficient<sup>29</sup> or insufficient<sup>30</sup> to show payment by the surety, or insufficient to show that the surety had accepted payment of the indebtedness due him from the principal.<sup>31</sup>

§ 332. — Questions of Law and Fact

In an action by a surety against his principal, con-troverted questions of fact are for the jury. The direction of a verdict is proper only where the evidence warrants it.

In an action by a surety against his principal, it is for the jury to determine controverted questions of fact under proper instruction of the court.<sup>32</sup> Thus, on conflicting evidence, whether the surety acted in good faith,<sup>33</sup> or whether a promise sued on was original or collateral,<sup>34</sup> is a question which should be submitted to the jury. So, also, where the defense is that the relation of the parties has changed, whether the original surety was entitled to recover from the original principal the amount of a judgment previously rendered against the former is a question for the jury.<sup>35</sup> On the other hand, where the evidence on an issue is legally insufficient, it should not be submitted to the jury.<sup>36</sup>

Direction of verdict. Although a directed verdict has been held proper where the material facts were admitted,<sup>37</sup> or one party has failed to make out his case,<sup>38</sup> a verdict should not be directed when such a procedure is not warranted by the evidence.<sup>39</sup> So, the direction of a verdict for the surety is improper where there is a direct conflict in the evidence offered by the parties.<sup>40</sup>

§ 333. — Instructions

In an action by a surety against his principal, the court in its instructions should state correctly the legal principals applicable to the case.

In an action by a surety against his principal, it is the duty of the court to state correctly in its instructions the legal principles applicable to the case.<sup>41</sup> The instructions must conform to the pleadings and the evidence,<sup>42</sup> and must not be argumentative<sup>43</sup> or confusing.<sup>44</sup>

or board's rules.—Fidelity & Casualty Co. of New York v. Zappolo, 274 N.Y.S. 698, 153 Misc. 258.

§ 334. — Judgment

If the surety is seeking to enforce payment, the court should make the necessary orders; a court having all interested parties before it should adjudicate and protect, by its decree, all the equities of the parties as exposed by the evidence.

In a suit by a surety against his principal for indemnity before payment, under a statute giving such remedy, the judgment against the principal should be for a particular sum to be realized on execution, and not merely that the principal indemnify the surety.<sup>45</sup> If the surety is suing to enforce payment, the court should make such orders as may be necessary to accomplish this purpose.<sup>46</sup> Thus, the court, having all interested parties before it, should adjudicate, adjust, and protect, by its decree, all the equities of the respective parties as they are exposed by the evidence.<sup>47</sup> A personal judgment may be had against the principal,<sup>48</sup> and, if the surety's action is brought in the same court in which the creditor's claim has proceeded to judgment, it is proper to order the amount collected on the judgment against the principal to be paid into court for the benefit of the owner of the original judgment.<sup>49</sup> A decree for payment to the surety before he has paid the debt is erroneous,<sup>50</sup> the proper decree being that the proceeds of the judgment be applied on the debt<sup>51</sup> or for the payment of the amount to the holders of the debt.<sup>52</sup>

Judgment for specific thing. The surety is entitled to judgment against the principal for the same specific thing he himself has been adjudged to pay.<sup>53</sup>

Conclusiveness. A judgment in an action by sureties against the principal to foreclose a mortgage to satisfy the indebtedness paid and unpaid is not conclusive as to the amount of claims of creditors not parties at the time it was rendered.<sup>54</sup>

§ 335. — Amount or Extent of Recovery

- a. In general
- b. As affected by medium of payment
- c. Interest
- d. Costs and expenses

a. In General

In an action against his principal for reimbursement, a surety is not entitled to recover more than the amount or value actually paid by him, with interest; the principal is entitled to the benefit of any compromise or settlement with the creditor.

The measure of recovery in an action by a surety against his principal for reimbursement is the amount he had to pay on the claim against which he was indemnified,<sup>55</sup> and it is the same whether

In suit for exoneration, surety may be declared jointly liable with principal, notwithstanding as indorser of notes he could not be sued jointly with principal, he comes into a court of equity seeking relief, submits himself to the jurisdiction of the court, and offers to do equity.—Alabama Bank & Trust Co. v. Full reimbursement

(1) Surety who paid note was entitled to judgment against principal the action is brought on the implied, or on an express, promise to reimburse.<sup>56</sup> The surety cannot collect any more than the amount or value actually paid by him<sup>57</sup> with interest, as discussed infra subdivision c of this section, even though he has taken an assignment of the full claim;<sup>58</sup> the principal can be held only for the amount for which the surety became liable, either primarily or secondarily.<sup>59</sup> Accordingly the principal is entitled to the benefit of any compromise or settlement made with the creditor;<sup>60</sup> but a proper charge made by the surety for the suretyship need not be credited against the amount of the recovery,<sup>61</sup> and the principal can have no benefit from a voluntary payment made to the surety by the latter's partner, where there is no privity between such partner and the principal.<sup>62</sup>

The surety is not entitled to recover for remote and indirect losses suffered by him which could have been avoided by payment of the debt.<sup>63</sup>

A party suing as surety for the full amount of a note paid may recover one half of it where it appears that one half of the proceeds was used for his benefit.<sup>64</sup>

b. As Affected by Medium of Payment

A surety paying in property or depreciated paper may recover to the extent of its value; if the property is of greater value than the amount of the debt, he is not entitled to recover the excess from the principal.

maker for full amount paid.—Salzberg v. Deutsch, 270 N.Y.S. 595, 150 Misc. 870.

(2) A surety who has been made to pay should have full reimbursement out of the assets of the principal debtor as far as it can be given him without injustice to others; and the rights and interests which must be balanced in determining what is a just distribution are those of the surety, the creditor whom he has secured, and the general creditors.—American Surety Co. of New York v. Bethlehem Nat. Bank of Bethlehem, Pa., D.C.Pa., 33 F.Supp. 722, reversed on other grounds 116 F.2d 75, reversed on other grounds 62 S.Ct. 226, 314 U.S. 314, 86 L.Ed. 241, 138 A.L.R. 509.

(3) Where one who stands in position of surety is obliged to pay all or part of common obligation, he is entitled to full reimbursement from the principal, and statute permitting contribution between codebtors who are each liable in the same right is inapplicable.—Gholson v. Savin, 31 N.E.2d 858, 137 Ohio St. 551, 139 A.L.R. 75.

Under a statute providing that, if a surety pays the whole or any part of a debt or liability for which he is bound as such, he may recover the amount from the principal by action of law, a surety who discharges his principal's obligation is limited to recovering the amount actually paid, even though he takes an assignment of the obligation from the creditor and brings action against the principal thereon; a surety may not be permitted to circumvent the statute by suing on the original obligation rather than on the obligation of indemnity.—*Napier v. Settlement by ordinarily prudent person

If surety settled liability asserted against it by payment of a sum of money, surety was entitled to recover of principal such sum, if any, not in excess of amount paid, as an ordinarily prudent person, in conduct of his own business, and under same circumstances, would have paid to settle such a liability asserted against him.—*Indemnity Ins. A surety who makes a payment in property, as in land, may recover from his principal to the extent of the value thereof;<sup>65</sup> and, where the surety pays in depreciated paper, he is not entitled to recover more than its value.<sup>66</sup> However, the promise implied on payment by a surety is a promise to pay the debt, not the value of the property;<sup>67</sup> therefore, if the property is of greater value than the amount of the debt, the surety is not entitled to recover the excess from the principal,<sup>68</sup> and, if the debt is satisfied by execution sale of the surety's property, his recovery is measured by the judgment satisfied, and not merely by the value of the property,<sup>69</sup> or it is measured by what the property sold for, regardless of any greater actual value.<sup>70</sup>

The value of the property is its market value<sup>71</sup> at the time of payment;<sup>72</sup> but, if the principal and surety agree on the value of such property, other creditors of the principal do not have any right to object.<sup>73</sup>

c. Interest

A surety may recover from the principal for interest paid the creditor. He is also entitled to interest, at the statutory rate, on the amount he was required to pay the creditor, such interest running from the date of payment by him.

The surety is entitled to recover against the principal reimbursement for interest paid by the former to the creditor.<sup>74</sup> He is also entitled to recover interest, at the statutory rate,<sup>75</sup> on the amount which he has been required to pay to the creditor,<sup>76</sup> such interest, under the rules or statutes governing the accrual of interest, being held to run from the date of payment by the surety,<sup>77</sup> and not from the date of institution of his suit against the principal for reimbursement;<sup>78</sup> but a surety against whom judgment is recovered for the diversion of funds by the principal has been held entitled, on recovering judgment over against the principal, to interest from the date of the conversion.<sup>79</sup>

d. Costs and Expenses

- (1) In general

(1) In General

A surety can recover from his principal all reasonable expenses and necessary costs incurred because of the relationship, but, in the absence of express agreement or joinder by the principal in the action, not for costs and expenses unnecessarily incurred.

Successful defense in suit against surety alone

The statute providing that, if surety on bond satisfies principal obligation, principal must reimburse what surety has disbursed, includ-

principal and surety are sued together, the surety is justified in expecting that the principal will satisfy the claim, and can recover the costs of the suit which he is compelled to pay;<sup>81</sup> and the surety may recover costs and expenses, including those incurred in litigation, when the contract of the parties so provides,<sup>82</sup> provided they are not unreasonable or unnecessarily incurred.<sup>83</sup> However, the principal is not liable for costs and expenses unnecessarily incurred by the surety in litigation carried on by him in an attempt to avoid his liability<sup>84</sup> or to defeat the efforts of a party seeking to enforce it,<sup>85</sup> unless there was an express agreement for indemnity as to costs,<sup>86</sup> or the suit in which the costs were incurred was instituted by the principal and surety.<sup>87</sup>

The principal is not liable, in the absence of an agreement to that effect,<sup>88</sup> for expenses incurred in defending the title to securities transferred to the surety by way of indemnity,<sup>89</sup> for expenses incurred by the surety because of his refusal to pay creditor,<sup>90</sup> or for disbursements incurred by the surety in inspecting the job, when the principal gave notice that he might be forced to quit, in order to enable the surety to decide whether or not to take over the job in the event of the principal's withdrawal.<sup>91</sup>

It is incumbent on a surety seeking to recover from his principal costs and expenses incurred in litigation to show that the litigation was entered into in good faith and on reasonable grounds, and was a measure of defense necessary to the interests of both parties, and was calculated so to result.<sup>92</sup>

Where the amount is not specified in an agreement by the principal to pay expenses, the surety can recover only reasonable expenses.<sup>93</sup>

Surety for receiver. Under a counter bond agreeing to indemnify a surety for all damages incurred by reason of his suretyship, recovery against the indemnitor is not limited to the expenses incurred by reason of the guaranty that the receiver shall perform faithfully the duties of his office,<sup>94</sup> but extends to all expenses incurred by reason of the suretyship which would not otherwise have been incurred.<sup>95</sup>

(2) Attorney's Fees.

A surety may recover attorney's fees from the principal when the contract so provides; further, he has been held entitled to recover for attorney's fees paid in defending a suit, if the defense was made with the principal's consent or at his request, or to his advantage, or in good faith and in the exercise of reasonable discretion. Fees incurred in controversies collateral to the suretyship itself are not recoverable in an action on a contract of indemnity.

In the absence of a contract for the payment of attorney's fees in case of suit by the surety against the principal for money paid in discharge of the original obligation, such fees are not recoverable.<sup>96</sup> It has been held that the law does not imply an agreement on the part of the principal to repay to the surety expenditures by the latter for attorney's ing necessary costs and expenses, precludes surety on employee's fidelity bond from recovering from principal amount of costs, and expenses paid by surety in successfully defending employer's action against surety alone on bond, in absence of agreement by principal to indemnify surety, especially where there was no judicial determination in such action that principal had defaulted.—*Pacific Indemnity Co. v. fees in defending suit on the original obligation.<sup>97</sup> Under other authority, the surety can recover for attorney's fees paid by him in defending a suit, if such defense was made with the consent<sup>98</sup> or at the request<sup>99</sup> of the principal, or in the absence of notice from the principal that he is employing counsel to defend the action,<sup>1</sup> or in good faith and in the exercise of reasonable discretion,<sup>2</sup> or if the litigation was advantageous to the principal,<sup>3</sup> as by procuring the remission of a forfeiture of a bail bond.<sup>4</sup> If the surety was liable on a note with an attorney's fee clause, and is compelled to pay such fee, it being reasonable, he can recover it from the principal.<sup>5</sup>

Attorney's fees may be recovered when the contract of the parties so provides,<sup>6</sup> even though the principal is also liable to his own attorneys for their fees,<sup>7</sup> and notwithstanding the principal notifies the surety not to employ counsel or to go to any expense in connection with the case, since he himself is in a position to defend the suit;<sup>8</sup> but, if the contract requires the consent of the prin-

Reason for rule

When a surety is forced to pay the debt of his principal, the surety becomes a simple contract creditor of the principal, and no rule of law allows a simple contract creditor to recover attorney's fees.—*Armstrong v. #### Employment of counsel by principal

Where principal employed competent local counsel who presented every available defense and defeated action against principal and surety, employment by surety of counsel who interposed no different defense was not reasonably necessary, and hence principal was not liable to surety for counsel fees and expenses incurred in making separate defense; principal's letter to counsel employed by surety expressing gratification over outcome of litigation and appreciation for co-operation of surety and counsel did not preclude principal from avoiding such liability.—Maryland Casualty Co. v. Wood, 177 S.W.2d 365, 296 Ky. 476.

Principal acting as counsel

Where former judge, who was an attorney with ten years' experience, assured surety on his bond that he would himself defend action against him and surety for alleged negligence and that he would and could satisfy any judgment rendered therein, employment of counsel by surety was not reasonably necessary and judge was not liable to surety for counsel fees and expenses incurred in making separate defense, in absence of showing of any advantage surety might have obtained thereby.—*Maryland Casualty Co. v. principal to defend, a surety, who has defended without obtaining such consent cannot recover;<sup>9</sup> nor can the surety recover under his contract for fees incurred by him in a situation against which the surety has also contracted to indemnify the principal.<sup>10</sup>

A surety can recover for attorney's fees incurred in the prosecution of a suit to enforce the principal's indemnity agreement.<sup>11</sup>

Counsel fees incurred in controversies collateral to the suretyship itself,<sup>12</sup> as in an action by the surety against the principal for premiums,<sup>13</sup> or in anticipation of loss thereunder when none actually occurred,<sup>14</sup> are not recoverable in an action on a contract of indemnity.

Where the amount is not specified in an agreement by the principal to pay attorney's fees, the surety can recover only reasonable fees.<sup>15</sup>

§ 336. Statutory Remedies

Statutory enactments giving the surety convenient remedies for enforcing his rights do not exclude available common-law remedies.

A number of statutory enactments give the surety more convenient remedies for enforcing his rights as against the principal, as by provisions permitting him to have the suretyship established in the action against the principal, and on payment of the judgment to file a complaint and obtain an execution against the principal;<sup>16</sup> or, as discussed supra § 312, giving the surety the right to have the judgment against him and his principal stand and be enforced by execution against the principal; or authorizing recovery by a surety against his principal, whenever judgment is rendered against the surety, even though such judgment remains unpaid.<sup>17</sup>

Statutory remedies of the surety are cumulative and do not exclude such common-law remedy as might have been available to the surety before the statute.<sup>18</sup>

§ 337. — Summary Remedies

Statutes providing a summary remedy whereby a surety who has been charged may move for judgment against the principal are strictly construed, and a party claiming thereunder must bring himself within the statutory provisions and conform thereto.

A summary remedy is sometimes provided by statute whereby a surety who has been charged may move for judgment against the principal.<sup>19</sup> Such statutes are constitutional,<sup>20</sup> but they are in derogation

Statutes as providing additional remedy

(1) Such statutes merely provide a remedy in addition to that which might be invoked under equitable powers providing for contribution or subrogation, not based on the instrument evidencing the original obligation, but arising from implied obligation to pay.—Perkins v. Hall, 17 S.E.2d 795, 123 W.Va. 707.

(2) Implied obligation to pay generally see supra § 316.

Supplementary judgment by inserting amount

Under statute dealing with summary proceedings, in surety's action for indemnity for debt not due, motion to supplement first judgment by inserting amount fixed by plaintiff meanwhile discharging obligation was proper without supplemental pleading setting up amount due plaintiff.—Cloud v. Middleton, 44 S.W.2d 559, 241 Ky. 595.

tion of the principles of common law,<sup>21</sup> and are construed strictly,<sup>22</sup> and the party claiming thereunder must bring himself within the statutory provisions.<sup>23</sup>

In enforcing his rights in a summary proceeding the surety is required to connect the instrument on which he was bound with the judgment paid,<sup>24</sup> and the record should show facts indicating the suretyship relation.<sup>25</sup> Notice to the principal is sometimes expressly required,<sup>26</sup> but, although there is authority to the contrary,<sup>27</sup> where notice is not expressly required by statute it has been said to be unnecessary,<sup>28</sup> this doctrine being operative, however, only within the state where it is held, and not empowering citizens of such state to obtain judgments against nonresidents without notice.<sup>29</sup>

A surety who has paid several sums may maintain as many motions, and recover several judgments against his principal.<sup>30</sup> A surety is entitled to his remedy, even though he confessed judgment without service of process.<sup>31</sup> Where there is a joint judgment against several sureties which none have paid, all must join in the summary action against the principal.<sup>32</sup>

Defenses. In summary proceedings by the surety, the principal may avail himself of any equitable circumstances to show that he was not bound to pay the entire demand.<sup>33</sup>

Interest. Under a statute providing for judgment against the principal for the sum paid by the surety, it has been held that interest on such sum cannot be awarded.<sup>34</sup>

Judgment. In a summary proceeding for judgment against the principal, the judgment must show the necessary jurisdictional facts;<sup>35</sup> an order or judgment in substantial compliance with the statute is sufficient,<sup>36</sup> and surplusage therein may be disregarded.<sup>37</sup> If there are several principals, the judgment against them should be joint,<sup>38</sup> although it is not absolutely void if rendered against some of them only;<sup>39</sup> and, if there are several sureties, the judgment for them, before payment, must be joint,<sup>40</sup> but after payment it must be separate in favor of those paying.<sup>41</sup>

Judgment on the motion may be entered against the principal's estate where the administrator is a party to the action.<sup>42</sup>

A judgment for the amount paid, with interest from a given date, is defective if the record does not show when the money was paid.<sup>43</sup>

§ 338. — Attachment

Before the surety has satisfied the debt, he may have an attachment against his principal's property only in cases provided for by statute, which may give the remedy even before the debt is due; after payment of the debt he may have such attachment.

A surety is not ordinarily entitled to an attachment against his principal's property before he has satisfied the debt,<sup>44</sup> but after payment of the debt by the surety he may have an attachment,<sup>45</sup> and under various statutes the surety is given the remedy by attachment before payment, or even before the debt is due, as a means of enforcing indemnity against loss by reason of his suretyship.<sup>46</sup> Under

Note indorsed to surety. Where the payee of a note indorses it before maturity to a surety thereon, the surety is entitled to an attachment if the payee could have obtained one,<sup>49</sup> but it has been held otherwise where the note was indorsed to the surety after maturity.<sup>50</sup>

Attachment of guardian. A remedy by attachment of a delinquent guardian to enforce the delivery of the estate by him to his successor does not extend to justify such attachment in favor of a surety who has made good the deficiencies of a removed guardian, the claim of such surety not differing from any original debt for which no arrest can be made.<sup>51</sup>

C. AS TO THIRD PERSONS

§ 339. In General

A surety's rights or remedies as to third persons, including a surety for the debtor in a distinct demand, depend on the language of the particular instrument involved and the relationship of the parties.

The theory that payment by the surety to the creditor relates back to the time when the contract of suretyship was entered into, as discussed supra § 316 a, cannot be invoked to do injustice as against third persons,<sup>52</sup> and cannot be resorted to in order to give the surety rights which the obligee himself never had.<sup>53</sup>

A bill by the surety on a bond to the United States for the payment of a tax on a designated quantity of oil, to require the collector of internal revenue to assert a lien on the oil and for the appointment of a receiver, has been held dismissible as to the collector as without equity.<sup>54</sup>

The rights of a surety, as against third persons, in security given for the protection of the surety are discussed supra § 318, and in security given to a cosurety, infra § 348.

As against another surety. One surety of a non-resident debtor cannot, by bill or attachment in chancery, draw from another, who is surety for such debtor in a distinct demand, any funds which he may owe the nonresident, to the prejudice of such surety.<sup>55</sup>

Third party beneficiary; materialman. Where a contractor's bond contains a provision that the bond is for the benefit of materialmen, as well as of the owner of property, a materialman's claim against the surety is not subject to the defenses available to the surety against the owner-promisee.<sup>56</sup>

Return of security. A surety after discharge is warranted in returning security to the principal on the surrender by the latter of the former's agreement so to return, notwithstanding such agreement had been indorsed with a request to deliver the collateral to another.<sup>57</sup> A surety who has been indemnified by the deposit of collateral by a third person and who has surrendered it under a mistake of fact has been held entitled to equitable relief by a decree for its return.<sup>58</sup> A surety paying a garnishment judgment on a claim against the person furnishing money as security, without knowledge that the money belongs to another, has been held not liable to the real owner.<sup>59</sup>

§ 340. Reimbursement of Surety

A surety generally has no rights, as against third persons not parties to the suretyship or indemnity contracts, to reimbursement for money paid on account of the suretyship relation; but a partner's surety obliged to pay a firm debt can recover from the other partners, and a surety can recover from a third person, for whom the principal acted as agent, money paid in a matter within the scope of the agency.

Generally speaking, a surety has no rights, as against third persons not parties to the suretyship or indemnity contracts, to be reimbursed for money paid on account of the suretyship relation.<sup>60</sup> So, a surety has no claim for reimbursement against a person merely because the latter has received money<sup>61</sup> or property<sup>62</sup> from the principal.

A surety on a contractor's bond has been held not entitled to judgment against a materialman contracting to indemnify the surety against loss, for fees of attorneys employed by the surety to represent it in concurso proceedings by the owner who completed the construction after the contractor abandoned it,<sup>63</sup> or for reimbursement of expenses of the surety's adjuster in investigating the claims of the owner.<sup>64</sup> A warrantor who, by agreement with the surety on a contractor's bond, expressly made himself solidarily liable with the contractor for the surety's loss may not assert, as a defense to the surety's call in warranty, that the surety has not exercised the rights of the contractor under the contract with the owner.<sup>65</sup>

Surety for one of several debtors. If a person becomes surety for one only of two joint debtors, he cannot recover from the other;<sup>66</sup> but, where a surety for one partner is obliged to make payment of what is actually a firm debt, he can recover from the other partners.<sup>67</sup>

Priority of right. Where a surety, by the terms of a bond given for the faithful performance of a contract, assumed obligations to make certain payments under certain conditions, its obligations and rights, when called on to perform, relate back to the date of giving the bond, so that, by virtue of an assignment to it by the contractor in the application for the bond, it has a right to money owed by the obligee to the contractor prior to the right of one receiving an assignment of claims from the contractor after the date of execution of the bond.<sup>68</sup>

Surety on customs duty bonds. Where bonds have been executed by one member of a firm to secure duties to the United States government on property imported into the United States, the other copartner is not liable to reimburse the surety.<sup>69</sup> So, a surety who pays a bond given by a consignee for duties cannot look to the consignor or real owner.<sup>70</sup>

Where principal was agent for another. If the principal acted as the agent of another person, and the surety pays money in a matter within the scope of such agency, the surety can recover from such third person,<sup>71</sup> although the existence of the agency was unknown to the surety at the time of payment.<sup>72</sup>

The absence of liability of a surety for contribution to persons other than cosureties is discussed infra § 353.

§ 342. Wrongful Acts

A surety injured by the wrongful or fraudulent act of a third person dealing with the principal may maintain an action against such person.

The bail of a person arrested on a capias ad respondendum may, at common law, maintain an action against a person who fraudulently aids and assists the principal in absconding from the state, in consequence of which the bail is compelled to pay the debt.<sup>73</sup> Also, a surety on a guardian's bond may recover from a third person funds transferred to him by the principal in violation of a trust where such third person had knowledge of the facts;<sup>74</sup> and the mere fact that mortgages securing loans by

IX. RIGHTS AND LIABILITIES BETWEEN COSURETIES

A. IN GENERAL

§ 343. In General

Cosuretyship is the relation between two or more sureties bound for the same duty of the principal and who as between themselves should share the loss caused by default of the principal.

Cosuretyship is the relation between two or more sureties who are bound to answer for the same duty of the principal and who as between themselves should share the loss caused by the default of the principal.<sup>76</sup> It has been said that cosuretyship must have a basis in intent and understanding of the parties.<sup>77</sup>

§ 344. Who Are Cosureties

Cosureties are sureties who are legally bound on contracts of suretyship for the same debtor or obligor and for the same debt or obligation.

A cosurety is one who undertakes with another to be responsible for the debt or duty of a third person;<sup>78</sup> and, therefore, as used in the plural, cosureties are sureties who are legally bound, as among themselves, on contracts of suretyship, for the same debtor or obligor and for the same debt or obligation,<sup>79</sup> the test of cosuretyship being a common liability on the same debt or obligation,<sup>80</sup> and a right of contribution.<sup>81</sup> This common liability, so as to constitute cosuretyship, may arise out of the same instrument,<sup>82</sup> and it may arise at the same time<sup>83</sup> or at different times.<sup>84</sup> The sureties may have become such without communicating or negotiating with each other,<sup>85</sup> and each without knowledge that the others had entered into the relation.<sup>86</sup> The relation may arise, although each surety has limited his liability to a portion only of the entire amount,<sup>87</sup> and although they are not bound in equal amounts.<sup>88</sup> Defrauded makers of notes, transferred by the payee to an innocent holder as security, are as between themselves cosureties.<sup>89</sup> A surety may be the cosurety of another, although his liability as a surety is not personal but is limited to pledged property.<sup>90</sup> Persons who would otherwise not be cosureties may assume such relation by agreement between themselves.<sup>91</sup>

Sureties who are not cosureties. In accordance with the above definition sureties are not cosureties, where they are not bound for the same obligation or principal,<sup>92</sup> or where, although bound for the same obligation, they do not occupy between each other the same relative position in respect of such obligation,<sup>93</sup> as where the liability of one surety terminates at the instant the liability of the other begins.<sup>94</sup> The fact that a person is jointly and severally liable, by statute, for the acts of another does not make him a cosurety with the surety on such other's bond, covering such acts.<sup>95</sup> A surety who is not legally bound is not a "surety" in any real sense of the term and, therefore, is not a cosurety with other sureties.<sup>96</sup>

same instrument in the same capacities as sureties, they are presumed to be cosureties,<sup>97</sup> as in the case of accommodation indorsers of an instrument prior to delivery thereof.<sup>98</sup> However, where they sign in different capacities, they are presumed not to be cosureties,<sup>99</sup> as in the case of an indorser and surety maker of a note<sup>1</sup> or of an acceptor and an indorser,<sup>2</sup> although they may become cosureties by an express understanding to that effect.<sup>3</sup>

Sureties for broker. Where two persons authorize their broker to pledge their securities as collateral for the broker's indebtedness on a loan, each becomes to the extent of their pledge a surety for such indebtedness, and as between themselves cosureties even without an agreement to that effect,<sup>4</sup> and such relationship continues as long as both continue sureties for the same debt,<sup>5</sup> and is not affected by an order by one of such parties for a broker's sale of sufficient securities held by the broker to pay any balance due the broker, so as to enable such party to demand his securities from the pledgee.<sup>6</sup> However, such relation of cosuretyship may be destroyed without an agreement between the sureties where they cease to be sureties for the

Common obligation of separate principals

Where sureties are bound on two different bonds for different principals, and surety on one bond assumes no responsibility for acts or defaults of principal on other bond, they are not cosureties, and the fact that there may be a default for which both principals are accountable, or for which they might both be charged jointly, does not make the obligation common to both sureties.—Maryland Casualty Co. v. Gough, 65 N.E.2d 868, 146 Ohio St. 305.

§ 345. — Sureties by Different Instruments

Sureties bound for a common principal to insure performance of the same duty or obligation are cosureties, although they are bound by different instruments.

Sureties who are bound for a common principal to insure the performance of the same duty or obligation are cosureties although they are bound by different instruments;<sup>9</sup> but not if the obligations are different,<sup>10</sup> as in the case of sureties on a renewal note and sureties on the original note.<sup>11</sup> Sureties on the general bond of an officer are not cosureties with the sureties on a bond given by such officer for some special purpose,<sup>12</sup> unless the general bond covers the duties for which the special bond is given.<sup>13</sup>

Sureties on successive bonds for the same obligation are cosureties if the bonds remain in force and are merely cumulative,<sup>14</sup> but not where the latter bond supersedes the former, and the liability of the surety on the first bond terminates as to the future when the second is given.<sup>15</sup> Sureties on different bonds given in successive steps in litigation are not cosureties,<sup>16</sup> as in the case of sureties on a bond to pay a judgment and sureties for the original debt.<sup>17</sup>

§ 346. Rights and Liabilities in General

The rights and liabilities as between cosureties depend on the contract between them and the relationship each may sustain to the other.

Between cosureties there exists a number of rights and liabilities depending on the contract between them and the relationship each may sustain to the other.<sup>18</sup> Growing out of the relationship generally, there arises the right to contribution and the right of one cosurety to the benefit of security or indemnity in the hands of the other, as discussed infra §§ 347-371; and, since the relationship existing between them is one of mutual trust and confidence,<sup>19</sup> there is imposed on each of them a duty to do all in his power to avert or diminish the common liability.<sup>20</sup> As between themselves each, in the absence of other agreement, is equally liable for but a proportionate share of the debt,<sup>21</sup> and neither can force the other to bear the entire burden;<sup>22</sup> but sureties, who would otherwise be cosureties, may agree among themselves that one should be primarily liable,<sup>23</sup> and it is competent for a surety to limit the extent of his liability with respect to the others.<sup>24</sup> As between sureties respecting the same debt or obligation, who are not cosureties, the primary liability rests on the last.<sup>25</sup>

§ 347. Recourse to Indemnity to Cosurety

The rights and liabilities of cosureties with respect to indemnity or security in the hands of one of them are considered infra §§ 348-350.

§ 348. — From Principal

- a. Before mutual rights of cosureties are adjusted

a. Before Mutual Rights of Cosureties are Adjusted

- (1) In general
- (2) Distinct debts or obligations
- (3) Security given for benefit of one surety
- (4) Rights as to third persons

(1) In General

As a general rule cosureties are entitled to participate equally in benefits received by any one of them from the principal.

Cosureties are in general entitled to participate equally in all benefits received by any one of their number from the principal,<sup>26</sup> such as payments made by the latter,<sup>27</sup> or collected from him by suit;<sup>28</sup> and they are entitled to the benefit of any security or indemnity which has been received by a cosurety from the principal,<sup>29</sup> or of the proceeds of any such security or indemnity,<sup>30</sup> whether such security or indemnity has been received before<sup>31</sup> or after<sup>32</sup> the surety receiving the security or indemnity has entered into the relationship and whether it has been received directly or indirectly.<sup>33</sup> As the rule is sometimes otherwise stated security<sup>34</sup> or indemnity<sup>35</sup> obtained by one surety inures to the benefit of all the cosureties. The cosurety receiving the security or indemnity is regarded as occupying the position of a trustee for the others,<sup>36</sup> with all the duties incident to such relationship;<sup>37</sup> and it makes no difference that it was given to him without the knowledge of the others.<sup>38</sup> However, a purchase of the principal's property by a surety, if made in good faith and for a reasonable consideration, will not give his cosureties any rights therein.<sup>39</sup>

If cosureties have paid unequal amounts, they are entitled to participate in proportion to the amounts they have paid.<sup>40</sup>

Sharing consideration for indemnity. Where a surety has obtained indemnity by the payment of a consideration, his cosurety cannot claim the benefit thereof without paying his proportion of such consideration.<sup>41</sup>

Reason for rule

The taking of such indemnity from the principal lessens his ability to pay. It would be a fraud on the cosureties to allow a surety to convert such indemnity to his sole use, in the absence of consent of the cosureties.—Beaver County v. Home Indemnity Co., 52 P.2d 435, 88 Utah 1.

(2) Distinct Debts or Obligations

A surety with an individual claim against the principal need not share security or indemnity received on such claim with cosureties on a joint obligation.

Where security has been given to a surety for the benefit of all the sureties for a particular obligation, he cannot apply it to a separate debt of the principal to himself;<sup>43</sup> but a surety having an individual claim against the principal,<sup>44</sup> or being surety for the same principal on another distinct obligation,<sup>45</sup> is under no duty to share the security or indemnity obtained by him from the principal with his cosureties on the joint obligation, if it is insufficient to indemnify him as to his individual claim or as to the separate suretyship obligation, except as to individual demands against the principal purchased or arising after entering into the relationship.<sup>46</sup> Payment or security given for the benefit of sureties liable for a particular debt or obligation is not available to sureties who are liable for a distinct debt or obligation, although for the same principal.<sup>47</sup> Where the surety takes security to indemnify himself as surety on several debts, on which he is surety with different cosureties, and such security is insufficient to satisfy all of the debts, it should be applied on all of them in the proportion that each bears to the aggregate sum.<sup>48</sup>

(3) Security Given for Benefit of One Surety

As a general rule cosureties have no right to participate in security given by the principal to a surety who stipulated for such security for his exclusive benefit at the time of entering into the relationship.

While it has been said that there are antagonistic authorities on the point,<sup>49</sup> as a general rule, a surety may, at the time of entering into the relationship, stipulate for security or indemnity for his exclusive benefit<sup>50</sup> and, in the absence of imposition or fraud,<sup>51</sup> or a showing that the security or indemnity was intended for the benefit of all,<sup>52</sup> the cosureties have no right to participate in the security or indemnity thus obtained,<sup>53</sup> except to the extent of the surplus remaining after the exoneration of the surety obtaining it.<sup>54</sup> On the other hand, where the security or indemnity so obtained is without the knowledge or consent of one becoming a cosurety at the same time as the surety receiving the security or indemnity,<sup>55</sup> or of one becoming surety with the understanding that the other will also become a cosurety with him,<sup>56</sup> the security or indemnity inures to the benefit of all, and security given to a surety after entering into the relationship inures equally to the benefit of all, even though intended for the sole benefit of the one to whom it was given,<sup>57</sup> unless the other sureties consent to the arrangement, in which case they waive their right of participation.<sup>58</sup> Of course, sureties may, by agreement, renounce their right to take the benefit of any securities they may respectively obtain.<sup>59</sup>

(4) Rights as to Third Persons

A surety's right to security given to a cosurety is superior to the rights of subsequent judgment creditors of the principal.

The right of a surety to security given to a cosurety is superior to the rights of subsequent judgment creditors of the principal.<sup>60</sup> On the other hand, it has been held that, where the security given to the sureties is in the form of an absolute deed to land, the rights of one levying execution on the undivided interest of one of the sureties in such land are unaffected by the rights of the cosureties.<sup>61</sup> As against the creditors of the principal, a surety is entitled to security held by a supplemental surety.<sup>62</sup> Security given to a surety can be followed by his cosureties into the hands of third persons, if it can be done without injury to the latter.<sup>63</sup>

b. After Mutual Rights of Cosureties Are Adjusted

After payment of the creditor and adjustment of the rights and liabilities of the cosureties as among themselves, any security thereafter received by one of the sureties does not inure to the benefit of the others.

After the creditor has been paid, and the cosureties have adjusted their rights and liabilities as to each other, the equities among them cease, each becoming an independent creditor of the principal for the amount paid by such surety, so that any security<sup>64</sup> or funds<sup>65</sup> thereafter received by one of them from the principal do not inure to the benefit of the others. The rule has been held to be otherwise when the principal is a state collector.<sup>66</sup>

§ 349. — From Creditor

A surety receiving securities from the creditor on payment of the debt has been held to hold them for the benefit of the cosureties.

A surety, to whom the creditor has turned over securities in his possession on payment of the debt, has been held to hold them, as a trustee, for the benefit of his cosureties.<sup>67</sup> On the other hand, it has been held that, where a surety paying the debt purchases property on the foreclosure of a mortgage assigned to him by the creditor, he holds the property free from any trust for his cosurety,<sup>68</sup> although he is chargeable with the fair cash value of the property at the time of the sale, less any expenses incurred in the foreclosure, in arriving at a basis for contribution.<sup>69</sup>

§ 350. — From Third Persons

Security given to a surety by a third person generally does not inure to the benefit of cosureties.

The rule, that any security or indemnity given to one cosurety inures to the benefit of all has been held to apply only to that given by the principal, and does not apply to security or indemnity given by a third person,<sup>70</sup> except that whatever security or advantage the surety receives from a third person, in consequence of the suretyship, he must apply to the relief of his cosureties.<sup>71</sup>

§ 351. Recourse to Security to Creditor or Obligor from Cosurety

It has been both affirmed and denied that security furnished to the creditor by a surety inures to the benefit of a cosurety who pays the debt.

A surety paying the principal obligation has been held not to be entitled to the benefit of security given to the creditor or obligor by a cosurety as collateral on the principal indebtedness<sup>72</sup> or as security for the latter's indorsement.<sup>73</sup> However, it has also been held that a surety who pays the debt and receives from the creditor a security which has been given by a cosurety is entitled to the benefit of the security, although only to the extent to which contribution may be exacted from the cosurety.<sup>74</sup>

B. CONTRIBUTION

§ 352. Right to Contribution in General

- a. In general
- b. Nature and origin of right

a. In General

The doctrine of contribution which permits one who discharges a common liability to recover of the coobligor the aliquot portion which the latter ought to bear is applicable in the field of suretyship.

The doctrine of contribution under which one who has discharged a common liability or burden may recover of another also liable the aliquot portion which the latter ought to pay or bear, as discussed in Contribution §§ 1-13, has been held to have its most common application in the field of suretyship, it being well settled that, as between cosureties, there exist a reciprocal right and liability to contribution in favor of the surety paying more than his proportionate share of a common obligation, to the extent of the excess paid, in order to equalize the common burden.<sup>75</sup> In order to be entitled to contribution, however, the obligation paid by the surety must be valid and existing against the principal or the cosurety.<sup>76</sup>

b. Nature and Origin of Right

Contribution between cosureties is based on equitable principles which equalize the common burdens which two or more may be called on to bear.

The reciprocal right and liability to contribution among cosureties is not founded on contract.<sup>77</sup> It is based on general considerations of justice,<sup>78</sup> or on equitable principles,<sup>79</sup> such as the maxim that equality is equity,<sup>80</sup> which equalize the common burdens which two or more may be called on to bear;<sup>81</sup> it is an equitable right growing out of the relationship between cosureties,<sup>82</sup> which springs up at the time the relationship is entered into,<sup>83</sup> and is fully consummated when the surety is compelled to pay the debt<sup>84</sup> or more than his portion thereof.<sup>85</sup> The law courts speak of it as being based on an implied contract between the sureties whereby each promises to reimburse the other for any payment in excess of his proportion of the debt,<sup>86</sup> and it is on this theory that the common-law courts began to enforce the right, as discussed infra § 372. The right has also been said to arise from the consideration that a surety engages to indemnify his cosurety against loss arising from his own neglect to pay his own share of the debt if the principal should neglect to pay.<sup>87</sup> It is a right, not a mere privilege dependent on judicial discretion,<sup>88</sup> and, except as to rights and property connected with the transaction,<sup>89</sup> the claim of a cosurety for contribution is no higher than that of any other claim.<sup>90</sup>

§ 353. Persons Entitled and Subject to Contribution

The right and liability to contribution usually exists among cosureties.

In the absence of an agreement to the contrary, cosureties are, as a general rule, entitled and subject to contribution among themselves,<sup>91</sup> on paying more than their proportionate shares of the debt, as considered infra §§ 364-368. Thus, sureties may be entitled to contribution where they are bound on the same debt or obligation for the same principal,<sup>92</sup> even though they became bound by different

Consideration for obligation

Surety's liability on bond was sufficient consideration for renewal notes executed with his cosureties with respect to their right to contribution after paying notes.—Shattuck v. Ellis, 288 P. 162, 49 Idaho 330.

Stockholders, cosureties with non-stockholder for corporate debt, were not primarily liable with respect to their right to contribution, lacking proof they owed for unpaid stock subscriptions.—Shattuck v. Ellis, supra.

Pledged property as cosurety

A surety is entitled to contribution from one who pledges property for the same obligation from the proceeds of the pledged property; it is not necessary that the pledgor be personally bound.—Schiska v. Schramm, 51 P.2d 668, 151 Or. 647.

instruments,<sup>93</sup> in different amounts,<sup>94</sup> at different times,<sup>95</sup> and without knowledge of each other's engagements.<sup>96</sup> In some jurisdictions contribution among cosureties has been provided for by statute,<sup>97</sup> such statutes, however, being merely codifications of the common law.<sup>98</sup>

Surety for compensation. The fact that the surety seeking contribution is a paid surety does not preclude his obtaining contribution from an accommodation cosurety.<sup>99</sup>

ligee because of fraud, as discussed supra §§ 75-77, cannot be required to contribute to his cosurety.<sup>1</sup>

Sureties who are not cosureties. Where the relationship between a surety and another is not that of cosuretyship, the right and liability to contribution based on such relation does not exist.<sup>2</sup> Accordingly, a surety is not liable for contribution to his principal;<sup>3</sup> nor can a person who, although appearing to be a surety on an instrument, is in fact the principal, having received part or all of the sum borrowed,<sup>4</sup> or who has subsequently become the principal by assuming the indebtedness,<sup>5</sup> have con-

Sureties on second public depository bond for township's funds deposited in bank which failed were held liable in contribution to surety on first bond, notwithstanding bonds had different penalties, since the fact that the two bonds had different penalties did not constitute them independent or substitutionary obligations, the only effect being to determine proportions in which contribution should be made as between signers of respective instruments.—Gray v. A surety which paid to commissioners of city's sinking fund principal amount of bonds on which it was surety for depository bank in liquidation was not entitled to contribution from surety for previous year where previous surety's bond fixed its obligation for definite period, and there was no showing that principal defaulted during time fixed.—Commissioners of Sinking Fund of Louisville v. Anderson, D.C. Ky., 20 F.Supp. 217, affirmed for plaintiff, C.C.A., 110 F.2d 961, certiorari denied 61 S.Ct. 28, 311 U.S. 669, 85 L.Ed. 429—American Bonding Co. v. #### Surety as maker of note

Act of surety in signing note, proceeds of which were used to take up other note on which he was surety, was not "accommodation" as respected cosurety and right to contribution.—Bazer v. Grimmett, 135 So. 54, 16 La.App. 613.

tribution from a surety for the debt. Where separate obligations of the principal are covered by different bonds with different sureties, the surety on one of such obligations cannot have contribution from the surety on another.<sup>6</sup> A mere surety is not liable for contribution to reimburse an indemnitor of a cosurety,<sup>7</sup> even where such indemnitor is the principal.<sup>8</sup> Where by statute a surety, who fails to justify after exception to his sufficiency is made, is released from liability on the undertaking, he is not liable for contribution to a cosurety.<sup>9</sup>

§ 354. — Surety Who Signs at Request of Cosurety

Some authorities hold that, in the absence of agreement to the contrary or of circumstances making contribution inequitable, a surety may have contribution from a cosurety who became such at the request of the surety.

It has been said by some courts that the right to contribution does not exist against a cosurety who became bound at the request of the surety seeking contribution.<sup>10</sup> However, other authorities hold that the right to contribution exists in such cases,<sup>11</sup> in the absence of circumstances making contribution inequitable,<sup>12</sup> or of an agreement or understanding to the contrary,<sup>13</sup> or unless the cosurety signed for the benefit of the surety.<sup>14</sup> While these rules are in apparent conflict, it should be noted that in all the cases stating and adopting the former rule in principle there are present circumstances other than the mere request, thus casting serious doubt on the proposition whether a mere request alone is sufficient to defeat contribution.<sup>15</sup>

§ 355. — Contribution from Estate of Cosurety

A decedent's estate may be held liable for contribution to a surety on an obligation as to which the decedent was a cosurety.

On the death of one of several sureties who are cosureties, his liability for contribution to a cosurety may be enforced against his estate.<sup>16</sup>

§ 356. Limitation, Loss, or Waiver of Right

Contribution between cosureties generally is not enforced where it would be inequitable.

Since the right of contribution is founded on equitable principles, contribution between cosureties generally will not be enforced between them when it would be inequitable.<sup>17</sup> Thus a surety's breach no rights against any persons other than the principal that the creditor did not have, and, therefore, could not compel the estate of a joint cosurety to contribute.—Waters v. Riley, 2 Harr. & G., Md., 305, 18 Am. D. 802.

Misrepresentations

Surety company which executed bonds for sheriff and paid claims resulting from sheriff's default, and which through its state agent represented to sheriff's prior sureties, who had executed bond on understanding that it was to be a temporary bond effective only until the sheriff should secure surety company to execute all bonds required of sheriff, that the bonds executed by the company released the prior sureties of liability on their bonds, was estopped from claiming contribution from the prior sureties who, because of the representations, of duty toward his cosurety will defeat the former's right to contribution,<sup>18</sup> and so will any act on the part of the surety which increases the liability of the cosurety.<sup>19</sup> The right to contribution is not destroyed by the death of the cosurety,<sup>20</sup> and, where all of the cosureties have entered into an express agreement concerning contribution, the insolvency<sup>21</sup> or death<sup>22</sup> of one surety will not affect the liability of the others. The right is not defeated by a surety's participation in a preferential payment by the principal to the obligee,<sup>23</sup> or by the failure of the surety to present his claim against the bankrupt estate of the principal.<sup>24</sup> A surety against whom a judgment is rendered does not lose his right to contribution by suing out a writ of error and superseding the judgment.<sup>25</sup>

§ 357. — Agreement between Cosureties

The right to contribution by a surety against a cosurety may be limited or destroyed by agreement between the cosureties.

Sureties, who otherwise would be cosureties, and subject and entitled to contribution, may, by agreement, limit<sup>26</sup> or destroy<sup>27</sup> their rights to contribution, and generally regulate the order of their liability among themselves.<sup>28</sup> Such agreement may be either expressed<sup>29</sup> or implied,<sup>30</sup> and, although it may be by parol,<sup>31</sup> it must be supported by a valid consideration;<sup>32</sup> if valid, such agreement supersedes the contract implied by law.<sup>33</sup> One of several sureties on the same obligation may limit his liability to the obligee without affecting his responsibility to a cosurety to contribute pro rata in a common loss.<sup>34</sup> A conditional agreement regulating the right of contribution cannot be enforced if the condition has not been complied with.<sup>35</sup>

§ 358. — Release or Discharge of Cosurety in General

A valid release by a surety of his cosurety terminates the liability of the cosurety for contribution.

A release by a surety of his cosurety terminates the liability of the latter for contribution,<sup>36</sup> provided, however, the release is supported by a sufficient consideration,<sup>37</sup> and such release is equivalent to payment by such cosurety, as far as other cosureties are concerned, so that the latter cannot be held liable for any portion of the share of such released cosurety.<sup>38</sup> Some authorities have held that a discharge of a surety from his liability to the creditor is a discharge of his obligation to contribute to a cosurety,<sup>39</sup> whether by operation of law<sup>40</sup> or by the act or neglect of the creditor.<sup>41</sup> Generally, however, it is held that a discharge of one cosurety by the creditor<sup>42</sup> or by operation of law<sup>43</sup> will not affect the right of the others to contribution from the surety so discharged, unless they have consented to the release,<sup>44</sup> or have paid with knowledge of the facts,<sup>45</sup> or unless the release or discharge is of such character as terminates the contract under which the obligation of the sureties arose.<sup>46</sup> So, also, a surety who signs his bond with knowledge that a surety on a prior conditional bond is thereby relieved from liability has been held not to be entitled to contribution from such prior surety.<sup>47</sup> Payment in part by a new note of a surety does not constitute a novation so as to discharge a cosurety from his obligation to contribute.<sup>48</sup>

Discharge by running of limitations against creditor. A conflict of authority exists on the question whether a surety may enforce contribution against a cosurety as to whom the statute of limitations has barred an action by the creditor.<sup>49</sup> Some of the authorities hold that the right to contribution is lost or does not exist in such cases,<sup>50</sup> but in most jurisdictions the general rule is that, notwithstanding a surety has been discharged from liability to the creditor by the statute of limitations, he is nevertheless liable for contribution to a cosurety paying the debt in whose favor the statute has not run;<sup>51</sup> and a like rule applies where the estate of a surety has been discharged from liability to the creditor because of the latter's failure to present his claim against the estate within the statutory period.<sup>52</sup>

Substitute surety. A surety giving a substitute bond for the full amount of the obligation is not entitled to contribution from a prior surety whose liability was released before default on the giving of the substitute bond.<sup>53</sup>

§ 359. — Release or Discharge of Principal in General

Whatever discharges the principal from his obligation discharges a cosurety from his obligation of contribution.

Whatever discharges the principal from his obligation discharges a cosurety from his obligation of contribution,<sup>54</sup> so that a release of the principal by a surety will prevent such surety from obtaining contribution from his cosureties;<sup>55</sup> and likewise a discharge of the principal by the creditor or obligee releases all the sureties from liability for contribution.<sup>56</sup>

§ 360. — Extension of Time to Principal or to Surety

Generally an extension of time to the principal granted by a surety or by the creditor with the consent of a surety deprives such surety of his right to contribution from a cosurety.

Except where the matter is controlled by agreement or custom to the contrary,<sup>57</sup> an extension of time for payment or performance granted to the principal by a surety,<sup>58</sup> or by the creditor with the consent of a surety,<sup>59</sup> takes away the right of such surety to enforce contribution, even though his cosureties have not been prejudiced by the extension.<sup>60</sup> So a surety on a note which has been renewed by a cosurety and the principal is not liable for contribution to such cosurety when the latter is compelled to pay the renewal note,<sup>61</sup> unless the renewal was made without objection by the cosurety and with no intent to release him.<sup>62</sup>

§ 361. — Effect of Causing or Participating in Default of Principal

A surety loses his right to contribution, to the extent of the loss suffered by his cosureties through the wrongful act of the surety.

A surety loses his right to contribution, to the extent of the loss suffered by his cosureties,<sup>63</sup> if the default resulted from his wrongful act<sup>64</sup> or if he participated in the wrongful act of a principal,<sup>65</sup> unless all of the sureties were equally at fault or acquiesced in the wrong.<sup>66</sup>

§ 362. Effect of Indemnity from Principal; Reimbursement

A surety who has been fully reimbursed by the principal is not entitled to contribution from his cosureties.

A surety is not entitled to contribution if he has been reimbursed by the principal, or from the principal's estate.<sup>67</sup> Generally, however, the right to contribution is not affected by the fact that the surety has received security on account of his liability,<sup>68</sup> where such security is, or may prove to be, worthless,<sup>69</sup> or unavailable,<sup>70</sup> although the surety will be accountable to his cosurety for a proportionate part of the proceeds realized from such security or indemnity;<sup>71</sup> and a surety cannot claim contribution from his cosureties without crediting the latter with funds received from the principal or in his behalf,<sup>72</sup> or without showing that such property failed to satisfy the debt.<sup>73</sup> In some jurisdictions the rule is stated that, where a surety has control or possession of security or indemnity against the common liability, he is under a duty to appropriate it to the common liability before seeking contribution from his cosureties;<sup>74</sup> so that a surety, being sued for contribution, is credited with payments received by the surety as indemnity, as discussed infra § 369. Of course a surety who has been fully indemnified by the principal after assuming the debt is not entitled to contribution.<sup>75</sup>

§ 363. Effect of Relinquishment or Loss of Security or Funds of Principal

As a general rule, voluntary relinquishment of security held by a surety, before termination of the liability of the cosureties, forfeits his right to contribution to the extent of the value of such security.

Subject to the necessity in some jurisdictions that there be present fraud in the relinquishment,<sup>76</sup> if, before the liability of his cosureties is terminated, a surety voluntarily relinquishes,<sup>77</sup> either before or after payment of the debt,<sup>78</sup> or loses or causes the loss of,<sup>79</sup> or negligently fails to enforce or apply to the debt,<sup>80</sup> security or indemnity held or controlled by him, he forfeits his right to contribution to the extent of the value of such security<sup>81</sup> and a surety

Payments into sinking fund

Under contract obligating corporation to deposit percentage of proceeds from sale of rocks with trustee bank as sinking fund, in payment of notes indorsed by sureties, surety who became president of corporation and in sole charge thereof had duty to continue payments into sinking fund, notwithstanding money could not be conveniently spared, as respects such surety's right to contribution from cosureties, and the fact that the corporation was losing money, and that surety who became corporation's president was supplying personal funds to enable corporation to exist, did not relieve the corporation of duty to continue payments into sinking fund.—Lampton v. Staebler, 67 S.W.2d 473, 252 Ky. 405.

Pro tanto release of cosurety

Where a surety, on paying the principal's debt, received from the creditor a security given by the principal, and that surety lost the security through his act or negligence, his cosurety was not thereby released altogether from the duty of contribution, but was released pro tanto.—Sanderson v. Cicero State Bank, 6 A.2d 130, 125 N.J.Eq. 450.

Value is presumed to be full or face value unless the delinquent proves otherwise.

who induces cosureties to surrender collateral security held by them for their protection cannot enforce his claim for contribution,<sup>82</sup> but his refusal to accept security will not defeat his right to contribution,<sup>83</sup> except where his cosurety has accepted security under conditions set by the principal which the surety refused to accept.<sup>84</sup> A surety holding funds of the principal which he should have applied to the debt and which he misapplied cannot have contribution.<sup>85</sup>

§ 364. Payment or Satisfaction

As a general rule, the right to contribution from a cosurety does not arise until the surety has paid or satisfied more than his proportionate share of the principal obligation.

Except as limited by the right of a surety to exoneration in equity before payment or as otherwise provided for by statute, it is generally held that a surety is not entitled to contribution from his cosureties,<sup>86</sup> and that a cause of action therefor does not accrue,<sup>87</sup> at law,<sup>88</sup> or in equity,<sup>89</sup> or in a statutory summary proceeding,<sup>90</sup> until the surety has paid, or satisfied, or discharged the entire debt or more than his proportionate share thereof.<sup>91</sup> Although payment by a surety of more than his share entitles him to sue for contribution, even though there remain unadjudicated additional claims by the creditor against the sureties,<sup>92</sup> where the surety pays less than the whole debt, or less than his proportionate share thereof, he will be entitled to contribution if such payment discharges the whole debt as to himself and his cosureties.<sup>93</sup> The right to contribution on payment by a surety of part of the principal debt has been held to arise without regard to the extent of the part which has been paid.<sup>94</sup>

§ 365. — Mode and Sufficiency

Payment by a surety which entitles him to contribution from cosureties may be made by cash or property or by whatever is accepted by the creditor in discharge of the debt.

It is generally held that whatever of value is accepted by the creditor from a surety in payment or satisfaction of the debt,<sup>95</sup> whether it is cash,<sup>96</sup> or property,<sup>97</sup> or other obligations,<sup>98</sup> such as a mortgage<sup>99</sup> commercial paper,<sup>1</sup> or bond<sup>2</sup> will be considered as payment entitling the surety to contribution from his cosureties. Similarly, whatever operates to discharge the original obligation of the cosureties is considered such payment as gives rise to contribution,<sup>3</sup> as where a surety individually has assumed the debt<sup>4</sup> or where he has given security for its payment.<sup>5</sup> The right to contribution exists, even though no payment at all has been made by the surety giving it, of the mortgage bond<sup>6</sup> or commercial paper<sup>7</sup> accepted by the creditor as payment, or even though payment thereof was not made until after the suit for contribution has been brought,<sup>8</sup> and even though it has subsequently been returned to the surety by the creditor as a gift.<sup>9</sup> However, a new note signed by the principal and one of the sureties, which, in effect, merely changes the form of the original contract, is not payment by the signing surety.<sup>10</sup>

§ 366. — Payment Not within Scope of Sureties' Undertaking

Payment by a surety to a creditor which is outside the contract on which he and his cosureties are liable does not of itself give the surety a right to contribution.

The mere fact that one cosurety has made payment to the creditor is not of itself sufficient to give him the right of contribution against the other cosureties, if such payment was outside the contract on which the sureties were liable.<sup>11</sup> Thus, where a surety makes a payment to prevent the very default on the occurrence of which the sureties were to be liable, it has been held that a right of contribution does not exist, since the default for which the sureties had undertaken never occurred,<sup>12</sup> unless such payment has been authorized by the cosurety.<sup>13</sup>

§ 367. — Voluntary Payment

- a. In general
- b. After debt barred by statute of limitations

a. In General

As a general rule, a voluntary payment, without legal liability, is insufficient to give rise to the right to contribution.

As discussed supra § 352, it is of the essence of the right to contribution that there be a valid obligation of the principal debtor, so that a surety who voluntarily pays the debt when he is not under legal liability to do so is not generally entitled to contribution;<sup>14</sup> or, as otherwise stated, payment by a surety, to entitle him to contribution, must have been made under compulsion<sup>15</sup> of a legal obligation.<sup>16</sup> Except where it is otherwise provided by statute,<sup>17</sup> payment may be made as soon as

In Louisiana

(1) A Code provision establishes the rule that the right to contribution from cosureties arises only when the surety pays the debt in consequences of a lawsuit against him.—Leigh v. Wright, 187 So. 649, 192 La. 224—50 C.J. p 296 note 63 [a].

(2) The reason underlying the Code rule is that no one of cosureties should be permitted to pay voluntarily a debt for which they are all bound and thereby cut the others off from such defenses as they might have or might wish to urge.—Leigh v. Wright, 184 So. 794, 183 La. 765.

(3) The rule does not apply, however, where the debt is paid by the surety on demand, and with the consent and concurrence of the cosureties.—Leigh v. Wright, 184 So. 794, 183 La. 765.

(4) Fact that the surety who was bound in solido with others to pay mortgage debt had made monthly payments as they fell due, notwithstanding acceleration provision in deed and mortgage did not take effect until failure for four months to make payment, was held not to preclude contribution from cosureties on theory that payments were prematurely made, where contribution was sought on suretyship contract which bound sureties to pay installments as they became due.—Leigh v. Wright, 16 So. 794, 183 La. 765.

the principal is in default if a legal liability exists,<sup>18</sup> although no suit has been brought by the creditor against the surety,<sup>19</sup> since the paying surety is under no compulsion to incur the additional expense of suits.<sup>20</sup>

Payment has been held compulsory<sup>21</sup> or not voluntary<sup>22</sup> in the sense that it defeats the right to contribution where there is a clear legal duty to pay the debt which is enforceable by judgment and execution or when it cannot be legally resisted,<sup>23</sup> even though made before maturity of the debt,<sup>24</sup> where it is apparent that the principal would be unable to pay the debt at maturity.<sup>25</sup> Payment is not voluntary because a surety does not interpose, against the creditor, a technical or unmeritorious defense,<sup>26</sup> or where he pays in ignorance of a good defense,<sup>27</sup> or waives a defense personal to himself;<sup>28</sup> but it is otherwise where payment is made by a surety who had knowledge of facts constituting a good defense,<sup>29</sup> even though made in good faith and under a mistaken belief that liability exists.<sup>30</sup>

Since mere delay of a creditor, unaccompanied by negligence, causing collateral in his possession to depreciate in value does not discharge the sureties, as discussed supra § 203, a cosurety is not relieved of his obligation to contribute when the surety pays the debt under such circumstances.<sup>31</sup>

Other instances of where payment has been held to be compulsory or not voluntary are set forth in the notes.<sup>32</sup>

b. After Debt Barred by Statute of Limitations

Payment of the debt by a surety after it has been barred by the statute of limitations against all the sureties is voluntary and does not entitle him to contribution.

Payment by one of the cosureties after the claim against them has been barred by the statute of limitations is voluntary and does not entitle him to contribution from the other cosureties,<sup>33</sup> but payment by a surety is not voluntary, when made before the statute has run in his favor, even though a cosurety has been discharged by the operation of the statute.<sup>34</sup>

§ 368. — Payment by Principal or with Principal's Funds

Payment of the debt by the surety with money of the principal does not entitle him to contribution from his cosureties.

Payment of the debt by the surety with money or property of the principal in his hands does not entitle him to contribution from his cosureties;<sup>35</sup> nor does payment on behalf of the principal, by a third person who has no recourse against the surety seeking contribution.<sup>36</sup> Where, however, appar-

§ 369. Measure of Contribution

- a. In general
- b. Effect of cosureties' bankruptcy, insolvency, or absence from jurisdiction
- c. Cosureties bound for different amounts
- d. When full amount paid is recoverable
- e. Basis of apportionment

a. In General

A surety paying the loss as to which all the sureties were equally bound is generally entitled to contribution from each of the cosureties of equal proportionate shares.

Since, as between themselves, cosureties are, in the absence of an agreement to the contrary, each liable for equal parts of the loss, as discussed supra § 346, where one of two or more cosureties has paid the whole or part of the debt for which they were all bound, his cosureties are each liable to him for equal proportionate shares of the amount paid,<sup>38</sup> although they are bound by separate instruments;<sup>39</sup> but in no case can the surety seeking contribution recover more than the excess he has paid beyond the amount which, as between himself and the cosureties, it was his duty to pay.<sup>40</sup>

Where, however, the sureties have limited the extent of the liability of each, as between themselves, by agreement, the measure of contribution is governed by such agreement,<sup>41</sup> except in the case of statutory bonds the liability on which may not be limited by agreement.<sup>42</sup> Although one of the cosureties has died, the other cosureties are liable only for such proportionate shares as they would have been liable for had not the former died.<sup>43</sup> Where partners have become sureties in the firm name, they are regarded, for the purpose of contribution, as one surety,<sup>44</sup> and the heirs of a cosurety are liable in such equal sums as amount in the aggregate to the proportionate share of their ancestor.<sup>45</sup>

In equity and sometimes at law the amount to be contributed is apportioned among the solvent cosureties within the jurisdiction.

It has generally been held that, if contribution is sought at law, each surety is liable for no more than his exact aliquot proportion, ascertained by dividing the amount for which all the sureties were liable by their entire number, without respect to the solvency of any of them.<sup>46</sup> In equity, however, the amount for which the cosureties are liable in contribution is apportioned among the solvent sureties<sup>47</sup> within the jurisdiction,<sup>48</sup> in the event that any of them are insolvent or out of the jurisdiction. The equitable doctrine is sometimes followed at law,<sup>49</sup> particularly in those jurisdictions where

As a general rule, cosureties bound by separate instruments naming different amounts are liable for contribution in proportion to the amounts named in their respective instruments.

Except as to sureties on official bonds, the penalties of which are regulated by statute, who are liable to contribute equally regardless of the fact that they have justified for different amounts,<sup>52</sup> cosureties who have executed separate instruments for different amounts are liable for contribution in proportion to the amounts named in the respective instruments,<sup>53</sup> and limited, of course, to the penalties named therein;<sup>54</sup> and, where sureties on the same instrument are liable for different amounts, each must contribute the proportion that the amount for which he is liable bears to the aggregate sum.<sup>55</sup> However, the fact that one of the sureties on the same instrument has limited his liability to the obligee to a lesser amount than that for which the other surety is liable has been held not to reduce the amount which he must contribute to the surety paying the loss.<sup>56</sup>

d. When Full Amount Paid Is Recoverable

A surety paying the debt may recover the entire amount from a cosurety whose wrongful acts caused the default of the principal.

In some cases a surety can recover the entire amount paid by him from another surety, as where the latter by his wrongful act caused the default of the principal<sup>57</sup> or where the amount sought to be recovered is interest charged to the principal on money borrowed by the surety from whom contribution is sought;<sup>58</sup> and where one of two or more sureties has agreed to be primarily liable as between himself and the others, the entire amount can be collected from him.<sup>59</sup>

e. Basis of Apportionment

- (1) In general
- (2) Payments, security, and proceeds of security from principal
- (3) Interest
- (4) Costs and attorney's fees

(1) In General

Contribution by cosureties to a surety paying the debt is generally based on the exact amount paid by the surety.

Subject to the limitation that contribution cannot be recovered for an amount paid by a surety in excess of the original debt,<sup>60</sup> contribution is generally based on the exact amount paid to satisfy the liability of the sureties, whether the payment is in full or by way of compromise of the whole debt,<sup>61</sup> even though the payment has taken the form of an assignment of the claim of the creditor;<sup>62</sup> and where payment is made in property, real or personal, its value at the time of payment fixes the basis for contribution.<sup>63</sup> The surety being sued for contribution is entitled to credit for any payments he has made on the principal indebtedness.<sup>64</sup>

(2) Payments, Security, and Proceeds of Security from Principal

In determining the amount which forms the basis of contribution payments made by the principal to the surety seeking contribution must be deducted.

In ascertaining the amount which forms the basis of contribution, there must be deducted from the entire amount any payments made by the prinprincipal to the surety seeking contribution,<sup>65</sup> and any funds, security, or proceeds of security held by such surety belonging to the principal.<sup>66</sup> Furthermore, a surety seeking contribution is chargeable with the value of securities which, through his negligence, have become unavailable for application to the common debt.<sup>67</sup> The surety seeking contribution must, however, be allowed credit for any expenses reasonably incurred by him in acquiring or keeping alive such security<sup>68</sup> or in realizing thereon.<sup>69</sup>

(3) Interest

Interest paid by the surety to the creditor must be included in determining the amount on which contribution is to be based.

In determining the amount on which contribution is based, interest paid by the surety to the creditor must be included,<sup>70</sup> and conversely, interest on the indebtedness, which the creditor failed to collect, cannot be included.<sup>71</sup> In addition, a surety may recover interest on the proportionate share of his cosurety from the date of payment to the creditor<sup>72</sup> at the legal rate,<sup>73</sup> even though the instrument held by the creditor provided for a higher rate.<sup>74</sup> Statutes sometimes provide for a special rate of interest where contribution is sought in a summary proceeding.<sup>75</sup> The cosurety may, however, by bringing into court the amount of his share of the sum due, be released as to any further interest.<sup>76</sup>

(4) Costs and Attorney's Fees

Where judgment is obtained by the creditor against all the sureties, contribution can be had as to the costs of the suit by the surety against whom the judgment was enforced.

Where a judgment is obtained by the creditor against all of the sureties, contribution can be had as to the costs of the suit by the surety against whom the judgment was enforced;<sup>77</sup> on the other hand, where, in a suit against several cosureties, judgment is recovered against only one of them, costs of such suit cannot be recovered against the cosureties who prevailed therein.<sup>78</sup> Contribution can be had as to costs incurred in a suit by the creditor against one surety alone which are paid by him, if defense of the suit was reasonably prudent and justifiable<sup>79</sup> or resulted in a reduction of the demand of the creditor;<sup>80</sup> and contribution for attorney's fees paid in resisting the claim of the creditors is allowed under the same conditions.<sup>81</sup> However, a surety, who has funds of the principal in his hands for the purpose of paying the debt, cannot be allowed reimbursement for costs and damages which subsequently accrue without the consent of the cosurety.<sup>82</sup>

Where a surety who has paid his proportionate share of the debt to the creditor is sued for and compelled to pay the balance of the debt, he can recover from his cosurety the necessary costs of the creditor's action against him,<sup>83</sup> and mere willingness, unaccompanied by an offer to pay his share of the original debt before action is brought for the recovery thereof, will not relieve a surety from liability as to contribution for costs;<sup>84</sup> nor will payment of his share after suit begun,<sup>85</sup> except that payment after suit is brought will relieve him of responsibility for costs accruing thereafter;<sup>86</sup> and it will not avail a surety to show that

Under some statutes, a surety who pays the debt after it is past due is entitled to recover an attorney's fee from his cosurety if he has given the statutory notice of suit.<sup>88</sup>

§ 370. Conclusiveness of Adjudication against Principal or Surety

A judgment obtained by the creditor against the sureties is conclusive on all of them as to all questions of liability within the issues determined in that action.

In an action for contribution, a judgment or decree obtained against the sureties by the creditor or obligee is admissible<sup>89</sup> to prove its rendition,<sup>90</sup> and is at least prima facie evidence of the debt,<sup>91</sup> and of joint and equal liability therefor.<sup>92</sup> It is conclusive as to all questions of liability within the issues determined in that action,<sup>93</sup> and as to matters which should have been raised therein;<sup>94</sup> conversely, the judgment is not conclusive of matters determined which were not raised by the pleadings in such action.<sup>95</sup>

A judgment or decree is not conclusive, however, on a surety who was not a party to the suit in which it was rendered,<sup>96</sup> unless he has notice of the suit and an opportunity to defend,<sup>97</sup> in which event it has been held that he will be concluded as to such matters as he might have interposed in that suit.<sup>98</sup> Although admissible to prove the fact of its rendition,<sup>99</sup> and by way of inducement to evidence to show its payment by plaintiff,<sup>1</sup> and the amount,<sup>2</sup> such a judgment or decree is not evidence of the liability of the principal on which the liability of the sureties is predicated,<sup>3</sup> or of the common liability of the sureties.<sup>4</sup> Nevertheless, where a surety has contracted with respect to the conduct of one of the parties in some suit or proceeding in the courts, he is concluded by a judgment therein even though not a party thereto.<sup>5</sup> Where a judgment extinguishes a principal's obligation, the surety's obligation is also extinguished, including any rights of contribution which might have existed in favor of another surety had the principal and the first surety been held to be bound instead of to be not liable.<sup>6</sup>

Judgment against principal. A judgment in favor of a surety against the principal has been held not to be admissible as a defense to an action for contribution in the absence of a showing that the surety realized something on such judgment.<sup>7</sup>

§ 371. Enforcement against Cosurety of Judgment or Execution against Surety

Contribution against cosureties may be enforced under some statutes by the issuance of execution on the judgment obtained by the creditor.

Under the statutes of some jurisdictions, a surety who pays a judgment rendered against him and his cosureties may have execution issued under such

C. ACTIONS

§ 372. Nature and Form of Remedy

- a. In general
- b. Exoneration in equity and other relief
- c. Nature and form of action

a. In General

Although the doctrine of contribution between cosureties originated in equity, ordinarily it is enforceable either in equity or at law.

Although the doctrine of contribution between cosureties originated out of equitable principles, as discussed in Contribution § 2, and was at first known and enforced only in courts of equity,<sup>10</sup> the right became so well established that common-law courts, sometimes by virtue of statutory provisions, assumed jurisdiction to enforce contribution between cosureties<sup>11</sup> on the theory of an implied promise by each cosurety to reimburse each of the others for any payment in excess of his proportion of the debt.<sup>12</sup> The development of a legal remedy, however, did not deprive equity of its jurisdiction,<sup>13</sup> courts of equity retaining jurisdiction in such cases,<sup>14</sup> regardless of the adequacy of the remedy at law,<sup>15</sup> so that frequently there is a remedy either at law or in equity;<sup>16</sup> but where the machinery of the law is manifestly insufficient the only adequate remedy may be in equity.<sup>17</sup>

b. Exoneration in Equity and Other Relief

Under the practice prevailing in some jurisdictions a surety may, before he has paid the debt, file a bill to compel his cosureties to contribute to its payment.

Although it is well settled that generally an action for contribution does not lie until the surety has paid the debt or more than his proportionate share thereof, as considered supra § 364, it has been held in some jurisdictions that a surety, before he has paid the debt, may file a bill in equity to compel his cosureties to contribute with him to its payment<sup>18</sup> or to restrain the collection from him of the share of another surety in whose hands the principal placed funds to satisfy the debt;<sup>19</sup> and, where a solvent surety is indebted to an insolvent cosurety, equity will interfere to prevent the collection of such debt, although the creditor surety has not paid the debt of his principal.<sup>20</sup> Although, in such a suit, the court cannot compel the cosurety to pay to plaintiff his proportionate share of the principal indebtedness,<sup>21</sup> it can issue a decree fixing complainant's right to contribution and provide for his indemnity or exoneration by defendant cosurety when the former pays the latter's share of the indebtedness.<sup>22</sup> There is authority to the effect that it is no objection to a decree ordering defendant sureties each to pay their proportionate

Concurrent jurisdiction

Fact that surety, paying his share of principal's debt, has remedy at law does not prevent him from suing in equity to enforce contribution from his cosureties, and, even if such remedy is conferred by statute, equity retains concurrent jurisdiction.—Jones v. Berkley, 12 Ohio Supp. 82.

share of the debt to the creditor that the latter is not a party to the suit.<sup>23</sup>

It seems that, where a principal debtor is insolvent, and has a claim against one of two cosureties, the other cosurety may bring an action in equity against his cosurety and the principal debtor to have their accounts adjusted and the amount due the principal applied;<sup>24</sup> and, in order to avoid the whole burden of a judgment against the cosureties from being forced on one of them, equity will restrain an attempted fraudulent transfer of the property of the other in a case where the principal debtor is insolvent.<sup>25</sup>

c. Nature and Form of Action

An action at law for contribution is generally predicated on an express or implied contract to contribute, and in a proper case assumpsit may lie.

The action at law for contribution is generally brought on the contract which the law implies in the absence of express agreement, discussed supra § 352, and is enforced in an action of assumpsit under the common counts for money paid,<sup>26</sup> except that assumpsit is not the proper form of action by a surety against his cosurety to recover a loss sustained by the former occasioned by the fault of the latter.<sup>27</sup> If, however, the sureties have entered into an express contract as to contribution the action must be brought on such contract.<sup>28</sup> Actions between cosureties for contribution are sometimes regulated by statute, and are governed, as to procedure, by the laws in force at the time they are brought, although enacted after the contract was entered into.<sup>29</sup>

Proceeding on original debt or judgment. It is generally held that in order to enforce contribution an action cannot be brought on the original debt;<sup>30</sup> and, where payment of a judgment against the sureties is a satisfaction and extinction thereof, neither can the action for contribution be brought on such judgment.<sup>31</sup> Nevertheless a surety can enforce contribution from his cosureties by proceeding on the original contract or judgment where, by subrogation or assignment, he acquires the rights of the original creditor.<sup>32</sup>

§ 373. Conditions Precedent

- a. In general
- b. Proceeding against principal; insolvency

a. In General

Notice and demand ordinarily are not conditions precedent to proceedings for contribution, but may become such where the cosurety is in ignorance of the default or of the payment by the suing surety.

It is a general rule that before commencing suit against a cosurety no notice of the payment of the debt need be given to him,<sup>33</sup> nor need demand for contribution be made,<sup>34</sup> particularly where defendant surety has been the cause for the surety seeking contribution making payment.<sup>35</sup> Likewise, it is unnecessary that notice of the pendency of the suit, by the creditor against the surety now suing for contribution, should have been given to the cosurety.<sup>36</sup>

On the other hand, where the cosurety is ignorant of the default of the principal or of the payment by the surety, notice of the payment or a demand has been held necessary.<sup>37</sup>

b. Proceeding against Principal; Insolvency

As a general rule an action at law for contribution between cosureties may be maintained without first proceeding against the principal or showing his insolvency; but in equity it should appear either that the plaintiff proceeded against the principal without success or that the latter is insolvent.

The decisions as to whether or not the right to proceed against a surety for contribution depends on the insolvency of the principal are not harmoni-

Election

Surety may, at its election, work out its right of contribution against cosurety, not only through medium of independent and direct claim, but by way of subrogation to rights of creditor whose claim surety has paid.—Commonwealth ex rel. Schnader v. National Surety Co., 37 A.2d 753, 349 Pa. 599.

ous.<sup>38</sup> Based on the principle that the right to contribution arises on payment of the debt by the surety, it is quite generally held that it is not a condition precedent to an action at law for contribution by a surety paying the debt that he first proceed against the principal<sup>39</sup> or that he show the insolvency of the principal.<sup>40</sup> On the other hand, many cases hold that, in order to proceed against his cosurety in equity, a surety must either show that he has proceeded against the principal with due diligence but unsuccessfully or that the latter is insolvent,<sup>41</sup> and in at least one jurisdiction the equitable rule is applied in actions at law.<sup>42</sup> A requirement that the principal be either insolvent or absent from the jurisdiction is sometimes provided for by statute, such statutes being held to have reference to the condition of the principal at the time suit for contribution is brought, and not to the time of payment.<sup>43</sup>

§ 374. Defenses

- a. In general
- b. Judgment in favor of cosurety
- c. Payment

a. In General

Broadly speaking, equitable matters may be set up in defense of a suit for contribution whether it is brought in equity or at law.

Generally it may be said that any equitable matters may be set up in defense to an action for contribution,<sup>44</sup> whether the action be at law or in equity,<sup>45</sup> and what are matters of defense depends on definite legal principles, although founded in equitable consideration.<sup>46</sup> Matters which could not have been interposed as a defense to the original action of the creditor cannot be set up in defense to the action for contribution;<sup>47</sup> but a surety being sued for contribution not having had notice of the original suit of the creditor against the cosurety may interpose any legal defense which he might have interposed in such suit of the creditor.<sup>48</sup> A breach by a surety of his duty to a cosurety affords both a legal and an equitable defense against his claim for contribution.<sup>49</sup> One may defend on the ground that he did not execute the contract of suretyship,<sup>50</sup> that it was defectively executed,<sup>51</sup> or that there was no consideration therefor.<sup>52</sup>

On the other hand, it is no defense that the principal or defendant surety was not served in the original suit by the creditor;<sup>53</sup> nor is it a defense that plaintiff surety failed to enforce his rights against another cosurety.<sup>54</sup> A surety on a bail bond being sued for contribution cannot defend on the ground that a recovery against him is against public policy,<sup>55</sup> and fraud between the principal and plaintiff surety perpetrated on the creditor or obligee, but not causing the default of the principal, is no defense to the action for contribution.<sup>56</sup> A misrepresentation of law inducing a cosurety to sign as such has been held not a defense to a suit against him for contribution.<sup>57</sup> It has further been held that no defense to an action for contribution is afforded by the fact that insolvency of the principal resulted from mismanagement of plaintiff,<sup>58</sup> or that the assets of the principal were not efficiently administered,<sup>59</sup> or, in the case of a bank acting as cosurety for an insolvent bank, that no accounting had been made as between the two banks,<sup>60</sup> or that the statutory liability of the insolvent bank's stockholders had not been enforced.<sup>61</sup>

The doctrine of merger, under which a judgment extinguishes the original cause of action so that it cannot again be used as either a cause of action or a defense or set-off, is unavailable as a defense to a cosurety's suit for contribution where the facts do not bring the case within the principles of merger.<sup>62</sup>

b. Judgment in Favor of Cosurety

Where only one surety has been adjudged liable in an action by the creditors against cosureties, such surety is precluded from recovering contribution from a surety against whom no judgment was rendered, provided the latter was an adversary party.

Where, in an action by the creditor against cosureties, judgment is taken against one surety only,<sup>63</sup> or only one is found to be liable,<sup>64</sup> such surety cannot compel contribution from the one against whom judgment was not rendered, provided, however, in the action by the creditor, the cosureties were adversary parties;<sup>65</sup> and similarly, if judgment is rendered in favor of both sureties, but the creditor, on appeal as to one only, obtains judgment, the other is not liable to contribution.<sup>66</sup>

c. Payment

Ordinarily it is a good defense to a suit for contribution that the defendant cosurety has paid his proportionate share to the creditor or to the plaintiff.

Since a surety is equitably liable for his proportionate share only, under principles discussed supra § 369, it is a good defense to an action for contribution that he has paid such proportion to the creditor,<sup>67</sup> or to plaintiff cosurety,<sup>68</sup> except that payment of an obligation, as to which the surety seeking contribution is not involved, is no defense.<sup>69</sup> If, however, after cosureties have adjusted their accounts, and suppose they had settled them, one of them is forced to make further payment, he can have contribution as to such additional sum.<sup>70</sup>

§ 375. Set-Off and Counterclaim

A surety sued for contribution may set off a debt due him from the plaintiff cosurety.

A surety, in an action against him for contribution, can set off a debt due to him from the cosurety seeking contribution.<sup>71</sup> Conversely, a surety in an action against him for a debt owing his cosurety can set off a claim against the latter for contribution.<sup>72</sup>

On the other hand, in an action for contribution, defendant cannot set up a defense that plaintiff was indebted to the principal;<sup>73</sup> nor can defendant set off claims due by plaintiff to the principal<sup>74</sup> or debts due to him individually from the principal.<sup>75</sup>

§ 376. Time to Sue, Limitations, and Laches

General rules governing limitations and laches ordinarily are applied to suits by cosureties for contribution.

Provisions in statutes of limitation with respect to implied contracts apply to actions between cosureties for contribution,<sup>76</sup> regardless of the form in which the action is brought,<sup>77</sup> except where the action for contribution is founded on the original debt, in which case the statute applied is the one which would have applied against the creditor.<sup>78</sup> The general rules governing the effect of absence, nonresidence, and evasion or obstruction of process on the running of limitations ordinarily apply to suits by cosureties for contribution.<sup>79</sup>

Laches. In accordance with the rules appertaining to equitable actions generally, the surety must pursue his remedy with diligence,<sup>80</sup> but mere delay in asserting the right is not such laches as will bar an action for contribution<sup>81</sup> in the absence of anything showing prejudice to the cosurety by

§ 377. Parties

- a. Plaintiff
- b. Defendant

a. Plaintiff

Sureties making payment jointly may properly unite as plaintiffs in an action against cosureties for contribution; but sureties making payments separately may not unite at law except as permitted by statute although they may properly join in equity.

Sureties who have made payment jointly may unite in an action against cosureties for contribution,<sup>84</sup> but sureties who have made payments separately cannot so unite at law<sup>85</sup> except as they may be permitted to do so by statute.<sup>86</sup> In equity two or more sureties may unite whether or not they paid jointly.<sup>87</sup> One of the officers of a corporation, all of whom were cosureties on a corporate indebtedness, on being compelled to pay to the trustee in bankruptcy of the corporation the amount of the debt, as a preference created by all the sureties in causing the corporation to pay the debt while insolvent, may enforce contribution without the interference of the trustee;<sup>88</sup> and, where a firm entitled to enforce contribution transfers all of its assets to a corporation in which the members of the firm are stockholders, the corporation may properly maintain the suit for contribution.<sup>89</sup>

b. Defendant

In equity, and under some statutory provisions, cosureties or a surety and his principal may be joined as defendants in actions for contribution.

At law an action for contribution must be brought against each cosurety separately,<sup>90</sup> and a surety and the principal cannot be joined as defendants.<sup>91</sup> On the other hand, under the equitable rule requiring all interested persons to be made parties, as discussed in Equity § 133, a cosurety's suit brought in equity should join all cosureties and the principal in order to prevent a multiplicity of suits,<sup>92</sup> and under statutory provisions all persons against whom the right to relief is claimed to exist, whether jointly or severally, may be proper parties defendant in a cosurety's suit for contribution.<sup>93</sup> Persons, however, from whom it appears that nothing can be collected, although proper,<sup>94</sup> are not necessary,<sup>95</sup> parties. Thus it is unnecessary to join as party defendant an insolvent principal,<sup>96</sup> or insolvent cosureties,<sup>97</sup> unless it is sought to apportion contribution among the solvent sureties, as discussed supra § 369, in which event the sureties alleged to be insolvent must be joined.<sup>98</sup> A supplemental surety,<sup>99</sup> or cosureties not within the jurisdiction,<sup>1</sup> or a cosurety who has paid his proportionate share<sup>2</sup> is not a necessary party. In a suit in equity brought by a surety before payment of the debt to compel a cosurety to contribute his share, the creditor should be made a party,<sup>3</sup> but the creditor is not a necessary party to a bill in equity to subject indemnity to the claims of cosureties;<sup>4</sup> and, where a cosurety, under contract with another surety to share in funds acquired from the principal, receives the funds as rightfully due from the principal both as to claims by the principal and by the creditor, neither the principal nor the latter's creditor is a necessary party to a suit for accounting between the sureties, and it cannot be properly claimed that the rights of either principal or creditor are involved.<sup>5</sup>

§ 378. Pleading

A cosurety suing for contribution should allege in his complaint all facts essential to state his cause of action, such as that the plaintiff has paid the debt and that the defendant has not paid his share.

The general rule requiring plaintiff's initial pleading to aver all matters essential to state his cause of action applies to a bill or complaint by a surety seeking contribution from his cosurety.<sup>6</sup> Accordingly the bill or complaint must allege that plaintiff surety paid the debt,<sup>7</sup> and that defendant cosurety has failed to pay his share,<sup>8</sup> after notice and demand, where required.<sup>9</sup> Similarly where insolvency or inability of the principal to pay is a condition precedent to an action for contribution, plaintiff should allege such insolvency<sup>10</sup> or the inability or failure of the principal to pay.<sup>11</sup> Conversely, no allegation need be made of matters not going to make up the cause of action,<sup>12</sup> and, where insolvency of the principal is not a condition precedent to maintenance of the suit for contribution, plaintiff need not allege such insolvency.<sup>13</sup> Neither conclusions of law<sup>14</sup> nor averments negating matters of defense<sup>15</sup> need be set forth in the complaint.

Where indorsers of a promissory note have agreed to be liable as sureties among themselves, the contract of suretyship must be alleged,<sup>16</sup> but an allegation of protest for nonpayment of the note or a waiver thereof is unnecessary.<sup>17</sup> Where the complaint declares on a special agreement to indemnify, there may be joined therewith allegations on the common counts.<sup>18</sup>

Pleas. A special plea of want of consideration for the original undertaking is demurrable.<sup>19</sup>

Amendments. Rules governing the amendment of pleadings generally apply to actions for contribution between cosureties.<sup>20</sup>

§ 379. — Issues, Proof, and Variance

Matters not pleaded are unavailable in suits between sureties for contribution.

Matters which have not been pleaded, and hence are not within the issues, cannot be availed of in actions for contribution between cosureties.<sup>21</sup> Thus, where such matters have not been pleaded, the defense of exoneration by plaintiff's relinquishment of security is unavailable,<sup>22</sup> and evidence to prove the insolvency of the principal debtor is inadmissible.<sup>23</sup> On the other hand, where matters are sufficiently pleaded, evidence thereof is admissible.<sup>24</sup> Under the general issue, there may be shown want of consideration for the original undertaking<sup>25</sup> and payment by way of proceeds of security received by plaintiff surety.<sup>26</sup> Proof that payment of the creditor's judgment was advanced by a company which was later reimbursed by plaintiff surety is not a variance from a pleading setting forth that plaintiff had made the payment.<sup>27</sup> Proof of nonresidence of a surety will not sustain an allegation of such surety's insolvency.<sup>28</sup> Where defendant pleads an agreement by plaintiff to exonerate him from liability, a variance between such allegation and the proof is waived by failure to object to such proof at the trial.<sup>29</sup>

§ 380. Evidence

- a. Burden of proof and presumptions
- b. Admissibility; weight and sufficiency

a. Burden of Proof and Presumptions

As a general rule, the plaintiff has the burden of proving all the material allegations of his complaint.

General rules, discussed in Evidence §§ 103-157 and Contribution § 13 e, ordinarily control in suits by sureties for contribution as respects the burden of proof<sup>30</sup> and presumptions,<sup>31</sup> and accordingly, plaintiff suing for contribution must prove all the material allegations of his complaint.<sup>32</sup> Where insolvency of the principal is a condition precedent to the action for contribution, such insolvency must be proved by plaintiff.<sup>33</sup> On the other hand, defendant must prove all matters of defense.<sup>34</sup> Where security in the hands of a surety is surrendered by him, there is a presumption that they are of the value expressed on their face,<sup>35</sup> and the burden of showing that they were of less value is on the surety surrendering them.<sup>36</sup>

Fact of cosuretyship. Ordinarily the burden rests on plaintiff to prove that defendant was his cosurety;<sup>37</sup> but the burden rests on defendant to prove the contrary where there is a presumption that the parties are cosureties,<sup>38</sup> and where, by the instrument, the parties to the action for contribution apparently are cosureties the burden is on defendant to prove that he is a supplemental surety.<sup>39</sup>

Where indorsers of a note are held to be liable in the order in which they indorse, the burden of overcoming the presumption is on the party claiming that the relation of cosuretyship exists between them.<sup>40</sup>

Payment. The burden is on plaintiff surety to prove that he paid the debt<sup>41</sup> and to show the damages to which he is entitled;<sup>42</sup> but possession of the instrument on which the original obligation is based creates a presumption of payment.<sup>43</sup>

General rules control in respect of the admissibility and weight and sufficiency of the evidence in a suit by a cosurety for contribution.

In accordance with general rules, the liability of the cosurety for contribution, and all matters entering into such liability, may be shown by any competent evidence;<sup>44</sup> and, on the other hand, matters to defeat such liability may likewise be shown by any competent evidence.<sup>45</sup> Where the relationship of the parties is not plainly established by the writing, proper evidence is admissible to show the true relationship existing between them.<sup>46</sup> If contribution is claimed as to an amount paid for an administrator, the inventory and account of the latter are admissible for plaintiff.<sup>47</sup>

General rules govern in respect of the weight and sufficiency of evidence in suits by a cosurety for contribution,<sup>48</sup> as in the case of evidence to show

Proof of insolvency

Better practice to show insolvency of principal as prerequisite to maintenance of suit against cosurety for liability,<sup>49</sup> or its absence,<sup>50</sup> and evidence offered on the issue of the true relationship of the parties.<sup>51</sup> A parting with the right of contribution may be established circumstantially,<sup>52</sup> as may an agreement between successive accommodation indorsers to be liable jointly as cosureties.<sup>53</sup> Clear and satisfactory evidence is required to establish joint liability as cosureties on the part of successive accommodation indorsers.<sup>54</sup>

§ 381. Trial

A suit for contribution brought by one cosurety against another may properly be tried before a jury if maintainable at law or if within rules governing jury trials in equity.

Where the complaint in an action for contribution is such as not to bring it within the exclusive jurisdiction of a court of equity, it may properly be tried before a jury.<sup>55</sup> On the other hand, where there are present matters calling for the intervention of a court of equity, there is no right to a trial by jury, except as proper under the practice in equity.<sup>56</sup> As in actions at law generally, questions of fact, when the trial is to a jury, should be submitted to them for determination<sup>57</sup> where the evidence is legally sufficient to go to the jury.<sup>58</sup>

Instructions. As in civil actions tried before juries generally, the court should, when the trial is to a jury, fully submit all the issues of fact involved in the case<sup>59</sup> and properly instruct the jury as to the law applicable thereto;<sup>60</sup> and such instructions must conform to the evidence.<sup>61</sup>

Findings. The rules governing findings of fact in actions generally are applicable to findings in actions between cosureties for contribution.<sup>62</sup> Accordingly the findings of fact must be within the issues, as presented by the pleadings.<sup>63</sup>

§ 382. Judgment or Decree

Separate judgments should be rendered against each of several cosureties successfully sued for contribution.

A separate judgment should be rendered against each of several cosureties successfully sued for contribution,<sup>64</sup> and where some of the cosureties are insolvent the judgment must provide for contribution from the cosureties who are solvent.<sup>65</sup> If a bill in equity prays for repayment of the entire amount by defendant on the theory that he is primarily liable to complainant, the decree may provide for equal contribution, such relief being within the general scope of the bill.<sup>66</sup> In equity when there are still undetermined claims of the creditor against the sureties, the decree will be framed so as properly to protect the rights of all the parties.<sup>67</sup> In a proper case a judgment can be rendered against the cosurety for his proportionate share, even though, in the same action, the surety recovers a judgment against the principal for the full amount of his payment.<sup>68</sup> If the bill prays for contribution from cosureties on an official bond, confirmation of a master's report fixing the amount due to creditors in accordance with an order of court is a sufficient decree on which execution may issue.<sup>69</sup>

D. SUMMARY REMEDIES

§ 384. In General

Statutes prescribing a summary remedy for enforcement of contribution by sureties against their cosureties, as on motion, are in derogation of the common law and subject to strict construction.

Statutes prescribing a summary remedy for the enforcement of contribution by sureties against their cosureties are in derogation of the common law<sup>70</sup> and must be strictly construed<sup>71</sup> to embrace only cases therein provided for.<sup>72</sup> Such statutes are not exclusive of other proceedings for the enforcement of contribution,<sup>73</sup> and are applicable to past as well as to future transactions.<sup>74</sup> Such a statute has been said to be declaratory of a recognized rule of legal liability,<sup>75</sup> and, in a proper case, where a surety seeking relief by motion has failed to bring himself within the terms of the statute, the court may treat the proceedings as a civil action and give relief accordingly.<sup>76</sup>

Under some of these statutes a surety against whom a judgment has been rendered for the debt or who has paid more than his ratable share of such judgment may, on motion, obtain a summary judgment against each of his cosureties not parties to the original judgment<sup>77</sup> in the court in which the original judgment was rendered,<sup>78</sup> on notice to his cosurety<sup>79</sup> and on showing the insolvency of his principal.<sup>80</sup> Other statutes give a remedy by motion to a surety paying a joint judgment against all the sureties<sup>81</sup> or provide for the enforcement of contribution by the issuance of an execution on the judgment obtained against the sureties in favor of the paying surety,<sup>82</sup> and under some statutes the question of suretyship may be determined in a summary proceeding.<sup>83</sup> The record must show the facts necessary to sustain the jurisdiction of the court.<sup>84</sup>

§ 385. Procedure

The general rules governing motions ordinarily control in summary proceedings to enforce contribution by a cosurety; the judgment rendered should be several.

The rules of evidence governing motions apply in summary proceedings to enforce contribution.<sup>85</sup> Thus affidavits may be introduced in opposition to the motion;<sup>86</sup> and the judgment obtained by the creditor against the sureties is admissible in evidence<sup>87</sup> to show the liability of the parties in the original action<sup>88</sup> and to show that payment by the surety was under compulsion.<sup>89</sup> Judgments in the summary proceedings must be several.<sup>90</sup>

X. RIGHTS AND LIABILITIES AS BETWEEN SURETIES AND SUPPLEMENTAL SURETIES AND SUCCESSIVE SURETIES IN JUDICIAL PROCEEDINGS

§ 386. Supplemental Sureties

A supplemental surety is a surety for a surety.

A supplemental surety is one who, as between himself and another surety or sureties, is collaterally bound; he is a surety for a surety; and, to him, another surety occupies the position of a principal, their liabilities being successive.<sup>91</sup> Is is competent for one to become surety for other sureties;<sup>92</sup> but a surety for a surety, that is, a supplemental surety, and the surety are not cosureties.<sup>93</sup> There is no mutuality between him and other sureties.<sup>94</sup> Because as between a surety and a supplemental surety the latter is only collaterally or secondarily liable, the surety is said to occupy the position of principal with respect to the supplemental surety.<sup>95</sup>

§ 387. — Who Are Supplemental Sureties

b. Becoming supplemental surety by stipulation

a. In General

A person may become a supplemental surety in various ways.

Subject to the condition that there is present an intention to become merely a surety to the original surety, and not a cosurety, which intention may be shown by extrinsic evidence,<sup>96</sup> a person may become a supplemental surety in various ways;<sup>97</sup> and it has been held that the addition of the word "surety" to his signature may make the signer merely a surety for prior signers, and not a cosurety;<sup>98</sup> but there is also authority to the contrary.<sup>99</sup> An indorser occupies the position of a supplemental surety for prior parties.<sup>1</sup> Since joint debtors are sureties as to each other's share of the debt, under principles discussed supra § 39, a surety for joint debtors occupies the position of a supplemental surety as to each for the other's share of the debt.<sup>2</sup> A person who pledges his own note to secure the payment of another person's note is a supplemental surety as to an indorser on the latter note.<sup>3</sup>

The maker of a promissory note may be a surety for other makers who are sureties if such was the intention;<sup>4</sup> but such an intention is not shown by the mere fact that he signed several months after the others,<sup>5</sup> nor can any such intention arise when the signer is not aware of the other sureties.<sup>6</sup>

b. Becoming Supplemental Surety by Stipulation

The authorities are not entirely in accord as to whether or not one may become a supplemental surety by stipulation, and there is some disagreement concerning the necessity for consent of prior sureties.

On the question whether a subsequent surety can stipulate that he is to be a supplemental surety, and not a cosurety with prior parties, the cases are not entirely in accord. Some hold that he can so stipulate where the principal falsely informs him that all prior signers are principals,<sup>7</sup> or where he is ignorant of the existing suretyship,<sup>8</sup> or even where he has knowledge of the suretyship,<sup>9</sup> and although the prior sureties expected that the subsequent surety would be equally liable with them.<sup>10</sup>

By some decisions, the consent of those who have signed as sureties is not necessary to enable a subsequent signer to stipulate that his liability is to be that of a supplemental surety only<sup>11</sup> unless such a stipulation is contrary to the agreement under which the prior sureties signed.<sup>12</sup> Other decisions, however, hold that a subsequent surety cannot stipulate for secondary liability as to other sureties unless such other sureties assent thereto.<sup>13</sup>

company was within the company's power.<sup>30</sup>

Analogy to insurance. The business of corporations organized for the purposes of profit, in becoming the sureties for the performance of contracts of various kinds, is largely in the nature of insurance,<sup>31</sup> and, where such a company is organized under the provisions of statutes providing for the organization of insurance companies, it is to all intents and purposes an insurance company.<sup>32</sup>

A common surety may be defined as one which is engaged in business for profit and on terms and conditions fixed by itself,<sup>33</sup> and a surety company may be referred to as a "common surety."<sup>34</sup>

§ 392. Statutory Provisions

It is beyond the power of the courts to deny surety companies the rights, or to relieve them from the liabilities, of becoming sureties where statute confers such rights and imposes such liabilities.

Where the surety company is, by statute, given all the rights of personal sureties and made subject to all the liabilities of such, it is no more within the authority of the courts to deny such corporations the rights thus accorded than it is to relieve them of the liabilities imposed.<sup>35</sup> By statute, provision is frequently made allowing a surety company, authorized under the law of the state to enter into such an obligation, to become a surety on bonds required by law,<sup>36</sup> and the validity of such statutes has been upheld.<sup>37</sup> So it has been held within the legislative power to authorize a corporation to become a sole surety on bonds, although in the case of natural persons as sureties two or more sureties would be required,<sup>38</sup> or to authorize certain officers of trust who may be required by law or by order of court to give bonds to include as part of their lawful expenses in executing the trust such reasonable sums as they may have paid to a company authorized by the law of the state to do so for becoming a surety thereon.<sup>39</sup>

§ 393. Incorporation and Organization

An interstate consolidation of surety companies creates a new corporation, but a constituent company may continue its separate existence for a specified period in order to pay off its liabilities.

An interstate consolidation of surety companies creates a new corporation,<sup>40</sup> but a constituent surety company continues in existence for a specified period for the purpose of paying its outstanding liabilities.<sup>41</sup>

§ 394. Officers and Agents

Under the general rules of agency, a surety company is bound by the acts of its agent within the scope of his real or apparent authority, but not where he exceeds it.

The general rules of agency, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, are applicable to surety companies and their agents,<sup>42</sup> and a surety company is bound by the acts of its agent within the

Pleadings

Pleadings held sufficient to sustain judgment against agent of surety.—Verschoyle v. Holifield, supra.

What law governs

Where local agent of foreign bonding company had office in state of forum and there was nothing to show that surety bonds were executed and delivered at any place other than in state of forum, law of forum governed scope of agent's authority and effect to be given to alleged consent by agent to use of trade ac-

real or apparent scope of his authority.<sup>43</sup> Where the surety company has put into the hands of agents the power to induce others to accept them as such agents, the company is liable on bonds executed by such agents,<sup>44</sup> and is bound by the recitals therein,<sup>45</sup> especially where approved by a court,<sup>46</sup> even though in fact such execution was beyond the scope of their authority.<sup>47</sup> The agent's apparent authority must be apparent to the party relying on it,<sup>48</sup> and persons dealing with the company are not bound to search its records to ascertain what limitations these place on the agent's power to act for the company.<sup>49</sup> On the other hand, where the agent exceeds both his real and his apparent power, the surety company is not liable.<sup>50</sup>

A general agent of a surety company, acting in the company's interest, is presumed to have authority to do so,<sup>51</sup> particularly where such agent has been permitted by the company to hold himself out as its ostensible agent,<sup>52</sup> and, in the absence of a showing to the contrary, the general agent has all the powers of the corporation itself with respect to execution and delivery of bonds,<sup>53</sup> and may bind the company by his acts<sup>54</sup> and representations.<sup>55</sup> Ordinarily knowledge possessed by a general agent is chargeable to the surety company,<sup>56</sup> but where the party seeking to charge the surety company participates with its agent in a fraudulent scheme the company is not chargeable with such agent's knowledge<sup>57</sup> and is not responsible for his actions.<sup>58</sup> While the authority of a general agent may be expressly limited,<sup>59</sup> limitations on the powers of an agent of a surety company do not affect persons dealing with the agent without knowledge thereof.<sup>60</sup>

Power of attorney. The rules as to the construction of powers of attorney of agents generally, as discussed in Agency § 98, apply in construing the power of attorney of a surety company's agent,<sup>61</sup> and, in the absence of other knowledge, one dealing with an agent of a surety company has a right to rely on the agent's power of attorney.<sup>62</sup> Where a directors' resolution authorizes resident officers of a surety company to appoint an attorney in fact un-ceptances to finance subcontractor who was principal on bonds.—Anthony P. Miller, Inc. v. Needham, C.C.A.Pa., 122 F.2d 710.

Territorial restrictions

Power of attorney to act in the name and behalf of surety company, "as surety at Lynchburg," in executing bonds and obligations used quoted words as restrictive and not merely descriptive and defined territorial limit of the authority granted.—Southern Ry. Co. v. Thomas, 30 S.E.2d 575, 182 Va. 788.

62. Wash.—American Sav. Bank, etc., Co. v. Bremerton Gas Co., 168 P. 775, 99 Wash. 18.

der power of attorney to execute bonds, but requires that the nature of each bond be stated in the power of attorney, the latter proviso has been held to be merely directory.<sup>63</sup> Where provision is made for the recording of a power of attorney, persons dealing with the surety company's agent are chargeable with notice of limitations on his authority contained in a duly recorded power of attorney,<sup>64</sup> but, where no provision is made for such recording, the recordation of such an instrument is ineffectual to charge others with notice.<sup>65</sup> Where an agent is given power to issue bonds by a recorded power of attorney and resolution of authority by the company's directors, but such power is limited by an unrecorded letter of instructions of which the obligee has no knowledge, the limitation will not relieve the principal from any obligation which, except for such instruction, would be binding on it.<sup>66</sup> A resolution authorizing the officers to execute powers of attorney appointing attorneys in fact to execute bonds required by the laws of the United States, municipal laws, or otherwise, embraces every law owing its origin and force to the law-making power of the national government,<sup>67</sup> and is not restricted to municipal laws of the United States government.<sup>68</sup>

Ratification. A surety company is bound by the acts of its agents where it has ratified them.<sup>69</sup> Thus, where the surety company has received the consideration for the contract, it is put on inquiry as to whether its agents have acted within the scope of their authority<sup>70</sup> and must be deemed to have ratified the acts of the agents.<sup>71</sup>

Estoppel. A surety company is estopped to deny the authority of one who has become its agent by reason of compliance with statutory provisions constituting him an agent<sup>72</sup> or to assert that the signature of the company by the agent is not binding on the company.<sup>73</sup> So, where the agent acts within the apparent scope of his authority, the company is estopped to deny that the agent's act was proper and authorized.<sup>74</sup> The rule applicable to corporations generally, that a corporation having knowledge of the act of a person as its agent without giving notice of such ultra vires act is estopped to deny the existence of such authority, applies to a surety company which permits an agent to make a bond not within the scope of his authority without objection.<sup>75</sup>

The general rules governing the powers and functions of private corporations ordinarily control in respect of the powers and functions of surety companies.

The general rules governing the powers and functions of private corporations ordinarily control in respect of the powers and functions of surety companies.<sup>76</sup> A statute authorizing certain corporations to become sureties and making them suable in the same jurisdiction as the principal on the bond has been held inapplicable to a corporation guaranteeing performance of insurance contracts.<sup>77</sup> panies on suretyship contracts are governed by the rules controlling such matters in contracts for insurance.

Rules analogous to those governing contracts of insurance generally control as to the premiums of surety companies on suretyship contracts,<sup>78</sup> as, for example, with respect to the construction of the contract.<sup>79</sup> The surety company's right to collect premiums cannot be affected by any agreement to which it is not a party,<sup>80</sup> and an agreement to waive a provision in the bond of a right to recover premiums against the principal requires a new consideration.<sup>81</sup> A provision in the contract secured, for premiums to be paid by one other than the principal, does not preclude the surety company from recovering premiums from the principal under his agreement in the application for the bond,<sup>82</sup> even though the third person paid the first premium.<sup>83</sup> Where the principal has enjoyed the benefit of a contract secured by the company, he cannot refuse to pay the premium because of the termination of the company's authority to do business<sup>84</sup> or because the contract secured is in litigation<sup>85</sup> or is in fact declared invalid.<sup>86</sup>

Accrual and apportionment. The surety company's right to the payment of the premium payable in advance accrues at the time of the accrual of the company's liability.<sup>87</sup> The principal is liable only for premiums proportionate to the duration of the risk.<sup>88</sup>

Recovery back of unearned premium. The mere fact that a surety company is in the hands of receivers and that the principal has been obliged to give new bonds does not entitle the principal to recover against the receivers the amount of unearned premiums.<sup>89</sup>

Actions for premiums. If the company has incurred liability on the promise of consideration, it can bring suit to recover.<sup>90</sup>

Termination of liability. Release of the principal from the contract secured does not release him from his agreement to pay premiums.<sup>91</sup> Where, by reason of a default by the obligee, the principal ceases performance of a contract secured by the surety company, he may notify the surety company that the bond is no longer needed,<sup>92</sup> and thus terminate his liability for future premiums.<sup>93</sup> A usual provision in agreements for the payment of premiums is that the liability therefor shall continue until written evidence of the company's discharge from liability on the bond be furnished it, but such provision is inapplicable where the surety company itself acts in terminating its liability.<sup>94</sup> Discharge of the surety is, however, a defense to a suit for a premium due on a surety bond,<sup>95</sup> even though the surety had not been notified of the discharge.<sup>96</sup> The failure of the obligee to perform the contract secured does not affect the principal's liability for premiums where all the parties treat the bond as continuing.<sup>97</sup>

§ 398. Reinsurance

The general doctrines of reinsurance ordinarily apply to surety companies.

Under the doctrine that the business of a surety company is largely in the nature of insurance, as discussed supra § 391, the doctrines applicable to reinsurance generally apply to surety companies.<sup>98</sup> Thus, the rule applicable to reinsurance contracts generally, that, where the reinsurer assumes the risks of the reinsured and becomes substituted to its contracts, the original insured may recover directly from the reinsurer, applies to such contracts of reinsurance between surety companies.<sup>99</sup> Where, by terms of the reinsurance contract, the reinsurer company agreed to be liable for defaults after a certain time on all bonds on which no written notice of claim was received before a certain time, and, under another clause, the original surety company agreed that there was no default known to its officers, the fact that the latter clause was not true as to a certain bond does not except such bond from the reinsurance contract,<sup>1</sup> particularly where the evidence of such knowledge of an officer is insufficient.<sup>2</sup>

§ 399. Foreign Corporations

A surety company created in one state may do business in another on compliance with the laws of the latter.

Under constitutional or statutory provisions, a surety company created in one state may transact business in another state on compliance with the laws of the latter.<sup>3</sup> Thus under statutes it is usually necessary and sufficient that a foreign surety company first appoint some person residing within the jurisdiction as agent to receive service of process on the company<sup>4</sup> and that it make a deposit of money, securities, or bond.<sup>5</sup> When foreign surety companies are governed by special regulations, the general law pertaining to foreign corporations is not applicable to them;<sup>6</sup> but in the absence of special regulations the validity of the execution of its contracts is governed by rules applicable to the execution of corporate contracts generally.<sup>7</sup> If a foreign company has complied with the requirements of the law, it is not necessary to state in a bond which it signs that it is authorized to transact business in the state,<sup>8</sup> and, where a foreign surety company holds a local certificate to the effect that it is entitled to do business within the state, the courts may not go behind such certificate and inquire into its charter powers and the sufficiency of its paid-in capital.<sup>9</sup>

Foreign company as sole surety. Statutes permitting surety companies to become a sole surety do not apply to a foreign surety company where no such power is found in its charter,<sup>10</sup> even though it holds a certificate of a state official of such authority to be sole surety;<sup>11</sup> but where the charter of a foreign surety company provides that it may execute such bonds and it has complied with the state laws, or a statute so provides, the general rule applies.<sup>12</sup>

Penalties are often imposed by statutes for violations of state laws regulating surety companies, and, where a statute imposes a penalty against any person or corporation accepting a surety company as security when the company has not complied with the state regulations and against any agent who has solicited business for the company or acted as agent therefor, the penalty is recoverable only by a suit in the name of the state,<sup>13</sup> and not against one who is not an agent within the specification of the statute.<sup>14</sup>

Actions. The general rules governing actions by or against foreign corporations ordinarily control in respect of actions by or against foreign surety companies.<sup>15</sup> Service on one not appointed agent to receive service of process has been held insufficient.<sup>16</sup>

§ 400. Justification by Surety Company

A surety company may or may not be required to furnish justification in order to act, depending on the rule prevailing in the particular jurisdiction.

Jurisdiction generally

Where suable

Foreign corporation should be separately sued as surety on another such corporation's qualifying bond at former's domicile, rather than that of principal's receiver.—Hillebrandt v. Home Indemnity Co., supra.

16. U.S.—Ulmen v. National Surety Co., D.C.Mont., 4 F.Supp. 194.

While surety companies are sometimes permitted to become sureties on bonds and undertakings without justifying, under statutes so providing,<sup>17</sup> which statutes have been determined to be constitutional,<sup>18</sup> usually under statute or rule of court such a company is required to justify,<sup>19</sup> where excepted to.<sup>20</sup> Unless otherwise provided,<sup>21</sup> justification by a surety company is made in the same manner as by any other surety.<sup>22</sup> It should appear on such justification that the surplus assets of the company are equal to the amount of its undertaking.<sup>23</sup> Such a showing does not, however, absolutely require approval and acceptance;<sup>24</sup> but sufficient facts must be presented by the objections to overcome the presumption of solvency before a refusal to approve can be proper.<sup>25</sup> Under statutes the certificate of authority of a surety company may be sufficient evidence of its authority.<sup>26</sup>

"Principally" has been contrasted with "exclusively" see 33 C.J.S. p 114 note 45.

PRINCIPIA; PRINCIPIIS; PRINCIPIORUM; PRINCIPIUM. As the first words of maxims as to which there have been no recent applications see 50 C.J. p 321 notes 11-14.

PRINCIPLE. The word "principle" is defined as meaning the cause, source, or origin of anything;<sup>3</sup> an original cause;<sup>4</sup> that from which a thing proceeds, as the principle of motion, the principles of action;<sup>5</sup> a general truth;<sup>6</sup> a fundamental truth;<sup>7</sup> a law comprehending many subordinate truths, as the principles of morality, of law, of government, etc.<sup>8</sup> It is also defined as meaning motive;<sup>9</sup> ground, foundation, that which supports an assertion, an action, or a series of actions, or of reasoning.<sup>10</sup>

"Principle" has been distinguished from "conscience" see 15 C.J.S. p 977 note 27.

PRINT. The word "print" is accorded considerable flexibility of meaning by accredited dictionaries,<sup>11</sup> and it has a wide range of signification,<sup>12</sup> having various meanings, depending on the context and the different connections in which it is used.<sup>13</sup> Because of the relation which exists between the noun and the verb, the definition of the one sheds some light on the definition of the other.<sup>14</sup>

As a noun. In its broadest sense the word "print" signifies an impression of figures, characters, or letters, and in its more common sense it is used as applicable to letters.<sup>15</sup> It is not necessary, however, that the characters produced should be letters or numerals, or the result of types or stereotypes, or be reading matter, but the word "print" includes most of the forms of figures or characters or representations, colored or uncolored, which may be impressed on a yielding surface.<sup>16</sup>

The noun "print" is defined as meaning the impression made;<sup>17</sup> a mark, form, or character; a mark or figure made by impression;<sup>18</sup> a line, character, figures, or indentation made by the pressure of one body or thing on another;<sup>19</sup> that which, being impressed, leaves its form, as a cut in wood or metal, to be impressed on paper;<sup>20</sup> impressions on paper, or engravings on copper, steel, wood, or stone, representing some particular subject or composition, and which may be either colored or uncolored.<sup>21</sup>

"Print" is also defined as meaning a stamp;<sup>22</sup> an engraving;<sup>23</sup> an impression from an engraved plate; a picture impressed upon an engraved surface, etc.;<sup>24</sup> a picture, something complete in itself, similar in kind to an engraving, cut, or photograph.<sup>25</sup>

The word "print" is further defined as meaning anything printed;<sup>26</sup> a publication or published writing;<sup>27</sup> and also a fabric printed by stamping; a printed cloth.<sup>28</sup>

"Print" has been distinguished from "chromo" see 14 C.J.S. p 1115 note 7.

As a verb. There are many definitions of the verb "print,"<sup>29</sup> and it is variously defined as meaning to take an impression of; to copy or take off the impress of; to form an impression upon; to mark by pressure;<sup>30</sup> to make an impression with inked type;<sup>31</sup> to strike off an impression or impressions of, from types, stereotype or engraved plates, or the like, by means of a press;<sup>32</sup> to impress letters, figures, and characters, by types and ink of various forms and colors, upon paper of various kinds, or some such yielding material;<sup>33</sup> to cover with figures by a press or something analogous to it;<sup>34</sup> as, to print calico, etc.;<sup>35</sup> to stamp;<sup>36</sup> to stamp by direct pressure, as from the face of types, plates, or blocks covered with ink or pigments.<sup>37</sup>

"Print" is also defined as meaning to cause to be printed; to obtain the printing or publication of; to put in print, or cause to be put in print or issued from the press; to carry or set forth in print;<sup>38</sup> to publish;<sup>39</sup> as to print newspapers, handbills, books, pictures, and the like.<sup>40</sup>

While "print" may be familiarly used in the sense of "publish," and in that sense receives recognition in many of the dictionaries,<sup>41</sup> the two words have also been distinguished,<sup>42</sup> and it has been said that they are often confused.<sup>43</sup>

Printed

The word "printed" has a varied meaning in different connections, depending on the context.<sup>44</sup> While "printed" is not as broad a word as "published,"<sup>45</sup> the two terms are sometimes used interchangeably,<sup>46</sup> although they may,<sup>47</sup> but do not necessarily,<sup>48</sup> differ in meaning. It has been held that "printed" is not synonymous with "publication."<sup>49</sup>

Phrases employing the word "printed" are set out in the note.<sup>50</sup>

Printing

While the word "printing" may mean an impression,<sup>51</sup> or it may imply a mechanical act,<sup>52</sup> that is, the impress of letters or characters on paper or other substance,<sup>53</sup> and it also may mean the process of multiplying the copies, by sheets,<sup>54</sup> the term frequently is employed to denote the typographic art, typography in the full sense.<sup>55</sup> In this latter sense the word "printing" is variously defined as meaning art, or practice of impressing letters, characters, or figures on paper, cloth, or other materials;<sup>56</sup> the art of impressing letters;<sup>57</sup> the art of making books or papers by impressing legible characters;<sup>58</sup> the art or process of producing printed matter for reading, including illustrations, etc., by composition and imposition of types, and their subjection, when inked, to pressure upon paper in a printing press;<sup>59</sup> the mechanical art by which type is imprinted on paper.<sup>60</sup> In this sense "printing" signifies an art, something more than a mere mechanical pursuit,<sup>61</sup> and it comprises two distinct trades, composition, or the art of arranging types, and press work, or the art of getting impressions from composed types.<sup>62</sup>

§ 1. Terminology

- a. Prison
- b. State prison
- c. Penitentiary
- d. Jail
- e. Prisoner

a. Prison

The word "prison" has been defined as a place of confinement for the safe custody of persons, in order to their answering in any action civil or criminal; a building for the safe custody or confinement of criminals and more specifically convicted criminals.

A prison is a place of confinement for the safe custody of persons, in order to their answering in any action, civil or criminal;<sup>1</sup> places maintained by public authority for the detention of those confined under legal process;<sup>2</sup> a building for the safe custody or confinement of criminals and more specifically convicted criminals.<sup>3</sup> In a general sense the term may be said to include every place of confinement under legal process or lawful arrest,<sup>4</sup> but usually it is specifically applied to the place of confinement of convicted criminals,<sup>5</sup> and is used to designate an institution for the imprisonment of persons convicted of the more serious crimes.<sup>6</sup> A prison is not a place of refuge for a criminal; it is for his punishment.<sup>7</sup>

Correctional or industrial institutions for minors within a certain age are not now regarded as prisons;<sup>8</sup> nor is a correctional institution for the care of children committed under a juvenile court act a prison.<sup>9</sup>

Other terms compared and distinguished. The word "penitentiary" may be used synonymously with the word "prison."<sup>10</sup> The word "prison" is distinguishable from the word "reformatory"<sup>11</sup> and from the terms "county jail" and "city jail,"<sup>12</sup> although the word "jail" is sometimes used interchangeably with the word "prison."<sup>13</sup>

b. State Prison

Broadly speaking, the term "state prison" means a place of confinement for state prisoners. The term is frequently used synonymously with the word "penitentiary".

In a general sense the term "state prison" means a place of confinement for state prisoners; that is, for persons charged with political offenses, and confined for reasons of state.<sup>14</sup> In some statutes the term is used as a proper name.<sup>15</sup>

The term is frequently used synonymously with the word "penitentiary,"<sup>16</sup> and, as used in some statutes, applies to the penitentiary.<sup>17</sup>

It has been stated broadly that the term is never used as meaning "jail,"<sup>18</sup> and has been distinguished from "jail,"<sup>19</sup> and "county jail,"<sup>20</sup> but the term may be employed in some statutes in a sense broad enough to apply to a county jail.<sup>21</sup>

c. Penitentiary

The word "penitentiary" signifies a prison or place of punishment; a place in which convicts sentenced to confinement and hard labor are confined by authority of law.

"Penitentiary" is an English word in common use,<sup>22</sup> signifying a prison or place of punishment;<sup>23</sup> a place in which convicts sentenced to confinement and hard labor are confined by authority of law.<sup>24</sup> Usually the term is used to designate an institution for the imprisonment of persons convicted of the more serious crimes.<sup>25</sup> It is frequently used as referring to a state prison,<sup>26</sup> as distinguished from a county jail,<sup>27</sup> a city jail,<sup>28</sup> a local prison,<sup>29</sup> or

The word "jail" has been defined broadly as a building for the confinement of persons held in lawful custody.

"Jail" is a building designated by law or used by the sheriff for the confinement or detention of those persons who are judicially ordered to be kept in custody;<sup>32</sup> a building for the confinement of persons held in lawful custody;<sup>33</sup> a house or building used for the purpose of a public prison, or where persons under arrest are kept;<sup>34</sup> any place of confinement used for detaining a prisoner;<sup>35</sup> a prison appertaining to a county or municipality, in which are confined for punishment persons convicted of misdemeanors committed in the county or municipality.<sup>36</sup> It may include the dwelling house of the jailer living with his family in one part of it.<sup>37</sup> The word "jail" is distinguishable from the word "workhouse."<sup>38</sup>

e. Prisoner

The word "prisoner" has been defined as one who is confined in prison on an action or on commandment.

"Prisoner" has been defined as one who is confined in prison on an action or on commandment.<sup>39</sup>

It has been held that a person serving a sentence of imprisonment in a state prison is in contemplation of law a prisoner therein when at work outside the walls of the prison under the surveillance of prison guards.<sup>40</sup>

§ 2. Establishment, Maintenance, Use, Status, and Supervision

Generally, the matters of the establishment, maintenance, and repair of prisons or jails are regulated by statutes with which there must be due compliance.

The authority or duty to erect, furnish, repair, and maintain prisons, penitentiaries, jails, and other places of confinement usually is conferred or imposed by constitutional or statutory provisions<sup>41</sup> which must be complied with,<sup>42</sup> although compliance may be deemed sufficient which is substantial<sup>43</sup> or reasonable.<sup>44</sup> Generally, where authority with respect to the construction or establishment of a prison or jail is conferred on a particular public body or officer, such body or officer has the discretion to determine as to the necessity for the construction of a new prison or jail<sup>45</sup> and as to the size, quality, and cost of materials;<sup>46</sup> and a like rule applies where authority with respect to repairs is so conferred.<sup>47</sup>

ments are intended for the use of prisoners,<sup>48</sup> and such records may not be contradicted by parole evidence<sup>49</sup> or proof of usage,<sup>50</sup> although, where the records cannot be found, ancient usage is sufficient evidence that apartments have been appropriated for a prison.<sup>51</sup>

A political entity which is authorized to care for and dispose of its prisoners in ways other than by the maintenance of a jail is not obliged to maintain a jail.<sup>52</sup>

§ 3. — Use by United States of State Prison or County Jail

Provision has been made in various states for the reception and confinement in state or county prisons or jails of prisoners committed by process or order issued under the authority of the United States.

In response to a recommendation embodied in an early resolution of congress various states have made it the duty of their officers to receive and keep in the state or county prisons any prisoners committed thereto by process or order issued under the authority of the United States, as though they had been committed under the authority of the state, provision having been made by the United States for the support of such prisoners;<sup>53</sup> and the jailer or keeper cannot lawfully refuse to receive persons committed by authority of the United States.<sup>54</sup> Generally, the keeping and subsistence of such prisoners are matters of contract with the proper state or local authorities,<sup>55</sup> and a state statute relating to the amount of compensation to be paid is not binding on the United States unless it consents thereto.<sup>56</sup> The matter is purely one of comity,<sup>57</sup> and a state may refuse to allow the use of its prisons for the confinement of federal convicts.<sup>58</sup>

For certain purposes and to certain intents a state jail lawfully used by the United States may be deemed to be the jail of the United States,<sup>59</sup> and the jailer or keeper to be a United States official or an officer of the federal court for the purpose involved,<sup>60</sup> although it has been said that the jailer is not an officer of the United States.<sup>61</sup>

Sentence of federal offenders to jails, prisons, or penitentiaries maintained by state or subdivision thereof is discussed in Criminal Law § 2000 a, d.

§ 4. — Status as City, County, or State Institution

A distinction between state prisons and those of political subdivisions of the state has been recognized, but it has been laid down broadly that, unless restricted by law, the prisons of a county, city, or town become the public prisons of the state.

While a distinction between state prisons and those of political subdivisions of the state has been recognized,<sup>62</sup> the view has been expressed that, unless restricted by law, the prisons of a county, city, or town become the public prisons of the state.<sup>63</sup> Under a statute providing that sheriffs and other persons authorized to make arrests shall have the use, not to exceed a certain length of time, of city, county, and borough jails, borough authorities have some discretion as to the admission of prisoners to their lockup.<sup>64</sup>

A municipality may, as a general rule, be allowed to use the county jail.<sup>65</sup> In the absence of any statutory regulation, a municipal corporation may lawfully contract with the proper county authorities for the use of a cell or room in the county jail as a place for confining municipal prisoners.<sup>66</sup> Under a contract between a city and county for the assignment of city prisoners to the county workhouse, providing that the prisoners shall be "guarded and taken care of in every way by the county," a city prisoner is made a prisoner of county workhouse under the exclusive charge of the county authorities.<sup>67</sup> Where a statute so provides, county authorities must diet and provide suitable and efficient guards for the convicts sentenced to the county chain gang by the municipalities.<sup>68</sup>

Conversely, a county may have the right to use the jail of a municipal corporation within its limits for the confinement of its prisoners.<sup>69</sup> A statute requiring the court, in all the several counties which have an agreement with a municipal corporation for the detention of prisoners in its house of correction, to sentence prisoners there in cases of crimes not punishable by confinement in state prison makes the house of correction the common jail of those counties.<sup>70</sup>

§ 5. — Regulation and Supervision

The matter of the supervision of prisons is usually regulated by statute with which there must be due compliance.

The matter of the regulation and control of state prisons is within the jurisdiction of the state<sup>71</sup> and not of local subdivisions of the state,<sup>72</sup> and the legislature has the power and duty to act in this respect to the exclusion of local bodies.<sup>73</sup>

The matter of the supervision of prisons is usually regulated by statute,<sup>74</sup> the provisions of which must be observed.<sup>75</sup> These functions can be performed only by the officers, boards, or other authority to whom they have been intrusted by law.<sup>76</sup>

The rules and regulations for the government of prisons must be adopted by the appropriate authorities<sup>77</sup> in the manner prescribed,<sup>78</sup> and must be within the limits prescribed by law.<sup>79</sup> Where a measure of discretion has been left to the prison inspectors in the execution of a statute, the courts have refused to control that discretion.<sup>80</sup>

Federal prisons. Authority to control and administer federal penal institutions is vested in the attorney general<sup>82</sup> or, as sometimes stated, in the attorney general and the bureau of prisons.<sup>83</sup> The federal prison system is not under the administration of the federal courts,<sup>84</sup> and such courts do not superintend or interfere with the administrative conduct of a federal prison<sup>85</sup> or its discipline, as considered infra § 18.

§ 6. Officers and Employees

General rules as to the distinctions between public officers and employees usually apply in determining whether a person connected with the operation of a prison or jail is a public officer or an employee.

General rules, as discussed in Officers § 5, control in determining whether a particular person connected with the operation of a prison or jail is a public officer or merely an employee.<sup>86</sup> A deputy sheriff who has been appointed by the sheriff to act as jailer has been regarded as a public officer,<sup>87</sup> and the wardenship of a county penitentiary has been regarded as an office and not an employment.<sup>88</sup> On the other hand, guards of a certain grade in certain county prisons are not public officers,<sup>89</sup> and a guard in a county jail, employed by the sheriff under civil service rules, holds a position, and not an office.<sup>90</sup> The designation by statute of a prison guard as an officer of the state is controlling.<sup>91</sup>

In some jurisdictions the office of deputy sheriff and the office of jailer are separate offices,<sup>92</sup> notwithstanding they are usually held by the same person.<sup>93</sup> The position of jailer is one of common-law origin.<sup>94</sup> Under some statutes a jailer is a peace officer.<sup>95</sup>

The attendants and employees of a hospital maintained in connection with a state penitentiary, who are under the control of the board of directors and of the warden of such penitentiary, have been regarded as, in effect, employees of such penitentiary.<sup>96</sup>

Terminology. The term "warden" is sometimes used synonymously with the term "chief officer,"<sup>97</sup> "keeper,"<sup>98</sup> or "chief or principal keeper,"<sup>99</sup> and in the common parlance in some jurisdictions the superintendent of the penitentiary is referred to as "warden."<sup>1</sup>

The term "jailer" has been defined as the keeper of a jail or prison.<sup>2</sup>

A matron has been regarded as a "jail keeper" within the meaning of some statutes.<sup>3</sup>

cer the power to appoint prison or jail officials or employees is vested.

Generally speaking, in what body or officer the power of appointment of prison or jail officials rests depends on the terms of the regulatory statute duly construed.<sup>4</sup> Generally the legislature has power to provide for the manner of appointment of officials of state prisons<sup>5</sup> and to change or modify an existing method of appointment of such officials.<sup>6</sup>

Statutory provisions as to the appointment of deputies and other subordinate officials must be observed,<sup>7</sup> whether the appointment is to be made by the sheriff alone,<sup>8</sup> or subject to the approval of the judge of some court,<sup>9</sup> or by the jailer alone,<sup>10</sup> or with the approval of a specified court,<sup>11</sup> or by a particular board,<sup>12</sup> or by the county commissioners,<sup>13</sup> or by the municipal assembly.<sup>14</sup> While it has been held that, where the approval of an appointment by a judge is required, the discretion of such judge is not limited to the matter of the personal fitness of the appointee and extends to the necessity of the appointment,<sup>15</sup> and that such discretion cannot be controlled by a court, at least in the absence of gross abuse,<sup>16</sup> the view has been taken that a court, subject to whose approval the appointment of certain prison officials is to be made, is bound to make every intendment in favor of the appointment as a discreet exercise of the power, and cannot review such an appointment in pursuance of views, preferences, and opinions of any section of the community.<sup>17</sup> Under some statutes, the sheriff alone is entitled to appoint a deputy jailer.<sup>18</sup> The view has been taken that, even in the absence of statutory authorization, a sheriff may appoint a keeper of the county prison.<sup>19</sup>

While it has been held that, in the absence of statute, a sheriff has no power to appoint a physician for the county jail,<sup>20</sup> it has also been held that the sheriff, the warden, or other proper officer or board may appoint or employ a physician under authority implied from statutory powers delegated to him.<sup>21</sup> The view has been expressed that ordinarily the sheriff or other officer who has in his custody a prisoner whose condition requires medical attention should report the condition to the county board of commissioners before he calls

(2) A statute relating to deputy jailers in counties having a designated population, which has for its purpose the limiting of number of deputies and employees and salaries which might be paid them, does not limit jailer's right to name his own deputies and employees with the approval of the county court.—Mullins v. Commonwealth, 172 S.W.2d 211, 294 Ky. 593.

(3) Where number and salaries of jailer's deputies and employees had been fixed by order of county court, approved and signed by circuit and county judges and presumably approved by mayor of city in which jail was located, object of such statute relating to deputy jailers in counties having the designated population was fully accomplished, and statute was not violated when jailer subsequently filled a vacancy in the office of deputy jailer by an appointment with approval of county court.—*Mullins v. in a physician,<sup>22</sup> but it has also been held that, in case of an emergency, such sheriff or officer may without previous authorization by such board call a physician.<sup>23</sup> Some statutes have made provision for appointment of a physician by the lessee with the advice and consent of inspectors,<sup>24</sup> and, where such a statute also provides that, if the lessee neglects to fill a vacancy within a specified time, the inspectors are to fill it, it has been held that the rejection by the inspectors of an appointment does not entitle them to act independently until the lessee has had a reasonable time, not exceeding such specified time, after the rejection to make another appointment.<sup>25</sup>

Civil service. Under some statutes, the positions of certain jail officials or employees are in the classified civil service.<sup>26</sup>

b. Eligibility

Constitutional or statutory provisions or other regulations control in determining the eligibility of a person for a prison office or employment.

Eligibility of a person with respect to a prison office or employment depends generally on the terms of constitutional or statutory provisions or other regulations.<sup>27</sup>

c. Term of Office; Vacancy

Some constitutional or statutory provisions have fixed the term of office of certain prison or jail officials. Subject to constitutional or statutory restrictions, general rules applicable to public offices apply with respect to the commencement and duration of the term of office of prison and jail officials and with respect to vacancies in such offices.

The term of office of certain prison or jail officials has sometimes been fixed by constitutional or statutory provisions.<sup>28</sup> Some statutes have vested in the governing body of the county the power to fix the term of office of appointive offices of county jails.<sup>29</sup>

Subject to constitutional or statutory restrictions, general rules, stated in Officers §§ 43, 45, 46, apply to the term of office of prison or jail officials with respect to commencement,<sup>30</sup> and duration.<sup>31</sup> So, also, general rules stated in Officers §§ 50-53 usually apply with respect to vacancies in office, the filling of them, and related matters.<sup>32</sup>

d. Change of Status

A prison official is entitled to exercise the functions of his office until the end of his term, unless his incumbency is sooner terminated by resignation, or by due forfeiture of the office, or by due removal therefrom.

A prison official is entitled to exercise the functions of his office until the end of his term, unless his incumbency is sooner terminated by resignation,<sup>33</sup> or by due forfeiture of the office,<sup>34</sup> or by due removal therefrom.<sup>35</sup>

Generally speaking, in what body or officer the power to remove prison or jail officials is vested depends on the terms of the regulatory constitutional or statutory provision.<sup>36</sup> In the absence

36. In California

Power to remove prison directors is conferred on the governor by constitutional provision.—O'Brien v. Olson, 169 P.2d 8, 42 Cal.App.2d 449.

In Georgia

(1) The state prison commission had exclusive power to remove wardens by virtue of statute.—Minter v. Early County, 184 S.E. 319, 181 Ga. 754—Humber v. Dixon, 94 S. E. 565, 147 Ga. 480.

(2) The sheriff alone is entitled to discharge a deputy jailer appoint-of restriction by provision of the constitution, the legislature has power to provide for the removal of prison officials at the pleasure of the appointing power.<sup>37</sup> The view has been taken that, in the absence of authorization by constitutional or statutory provision, the power of removal is not an incident of the power of appointment with respect to an official whose term of office is fixed by law for a definite period.<sup>38</sup> In exercising power conferred by a constitutional provision to remove prison officials for specified causes after an opportunity to be heard on written charges, the governor acts in a judicial capacity, as distinguished from his executive power.<sup>39</sup>

Subject to qualifications or limitations imposed by constitutional or statutory provisions, the general rules, stated in Officers §§ 59-71, apply to the removal of prison or jail officials or employees.<sup>40</sup> Thus, generally, the power of removal is discretionary and without control where no term or tenure has been fixed by constitution or statute,<sup>41</sup> or where the office is to be held during the pleasure of the appointing power;<sup>42</sup> and, where the power to remove is expressly conferred by statute without limitation as to removal for cause, it is not essential to assign a cause.<sup>43</sup> Where, however, an officer is chosen for a definite term, and provision is made for his removal for cause, a removal without assigning a cause is illegal,<sup>44</sup> and the cause must be legally sufficient.<sup>45</sup> When the causes for removal are specified in the statute or in a valid rule or regulation adopted thereunder, generally the cause for removal must be one so specified;<sup>46</sup> but where the statute gives power of removal for cause, without specifying the causes, the power is necessarily of a discretionary nature, and the removing authority is the exclusive judge of the cause and the sufficiency thereof.<sup>47</sup>

Mode and procedure for removal. In the absence of limitation by constitutional or statutory provision, general rules, stated in Officers §§ 64-66, apply with respect to the mode and proceedings for the removal of prison or jail officials or employees.<sup>48</sup> Where the constitution directs the mode of removal, a statute may not prescribe a different mode.<sup>49</sup>

Statutory provisions for the investigation of a charge and the removal of the officer, where cause is shown, are sufficient authority for the designated tribunal to act.<sup>50</sup> Where removal can be made only for cause, specified charges, notice, and a hearing are required,<sup>51</sup> especially where a statute expressly so provides,<sup>52</sup> since such a statute is considered mandatory.<sup>53</sup> A hearing is not essential, however, where a valid statute confers the absolute power of removal without limitation.<sup>54</sup> The fact that a board, vested with the discretion of removing a prison official, is required to report the removal and the grounds therefor to a body whose failure to concur in the removal imposes the duty of reinstatement does not require the pre-

A jail warden of a county of the fourth class is an appointed officer within meaning of constitutional provision that appointed officers, other than those specified, may be removed at pleasure of power by which they shall have been appointed, and, therefore, jail warden was removable, without cause, by appointing power, the board of jail inspectors, notwithstanding the legislature provided as two causes for termination of such tenure misconduct or inefficiency.—*Commonwealth ex rel. Where illegal flogging of prisoners by guards occurred frequently for more than a year, it might be assumed that prison directors, in whom was vested general supervision and management of state prisons, in exercise of reasonable diligence should have discovered the practice, and were chargeable with constructive knowledge of the practice, as found by governor in removal proceedings.—O'Brien v. Olson, 109 P.2d 8, 42 Cal.App.2d 449.

ferment of charges, notice, and a hearing before a removal.<sup>55</sup>

While a requirement, that the discharge of an official can be made only after a presentation of the reasons therefor and the allowance of a reasonable time for making an answer in writing and the filing of the proceedings with the civil service commission, must be complied with,<sup>56</sup> and the reasons assigned for the removal must be sufficient on their face,<sup>57</sup> a hearing before the civil service commission is not necessary to make the discharge effective.<sup>58</sup>

Questions as to evidence in proceedings for removal have been considered,<sup>59</sup> and it has been held that, in a proceeding before the governor for the removal of prison officers under authority conferred by a constitutional provision, it is the exclusive province of the governor to determine as to the credibility of witnesses and the weight and sufficiency of their evidence to prove the charges.<sup>60</sup>

It has been held that certiorari, or a writ of review, will lie to review the decision of the governor removing a prison officer in the exercise of power, conferred by a constitutional provision, to remove for cause after an opportunity to be heard on written charges.<sup>61</sup> Such review is governed by the same rules which apply to the ordinary proceedings for a writ of certiorari.<sup>62</sup> On such review the court has no discretion except to determine whether the governor, acting in a quasi-judicial capacity, exceeded his jurisdiction in determining that any one of the charges involved is supported by some substantial evidence,<sup>63</sup> and it is not permissible for the court to determine that the governor exceeded his jurisdiction in finding the officer charged guilty, if a single material charge on which removal was based is supported by substantial evidence.<sup>64</sup> In a certiorari proceeding to review the removal of a jail employee in the classified civil service, the court cannot go beyond the assignment of reasons for removal where such reasons are sufficient on their face.<sup>65</sup> The due removal from his position of a classified civil service employee in a federal prison, in accordance with statute and the rules of the civil service commission, is not subject to review by the court of claims.<sup>66</sup>

Effect of removal. Where the incumbent of one office holds another office ex officio, his removal from the principal office removes him from the other office also.<sup>67</sup>

Reinstatement. A prison or jail official or employee wrongfully removed may, by laches, lose his right to reinstatement.<sup>68</sup> An employee who has been properly removed from his position is not entitled to reinstatement.<sup>69</sup>

§ 8. — Sheriff as Jailer Ex Officio

ly or by implication, confer virtually the same rights on a sheriff,<sup>71</sup> and some statutes have made provision to such effect.<sup>72</sup>

According to some authorities, where the constitution makes provision for the office of sheriff but is silent as to the rights attaching to the office, the common-law rights attaching to the office from time immemorial are recognized and cannot be detached by statute;<sup>73</sup> but other cases have taken the view that the office of sheriff is a purely ministerial office, the functions and province of which are to execute duties prescribed by law, and which may be contracted, enlarged, or transferred at the will of the legislature.<sup>74</sup> Where the office of jailer is recognized by the constitution, the court may place the jail and prisoners in the exclusive control of the sheriff, if the jailer refuses to perform his duties.<sup>75</sup>

§ 9. — Bonds

Whether a prison official must give a bond generally depends on whether a bond is required by statute.

Statutes sometimes require prison officials to give a bond for the faithful discharge of their duties,<sup>76</sup> and may authorize a board in its discretion to require such a bond from subordinate prison officials.<sup>77</sup> It has been held that, in the absence of any statutory requirement to that effect, the warden of a penitentiary cannot be required to give a bond;<sup>78</sup> but, on the other hand, it has been held that a sheriff may secure the performance of the duties of the jailer by requiring the latter to give him a bond of indemnity with satisfactory sureties.<sup>79</sup> A statutory requirement that the bond of the warden of a penitentiary shall be approved by the governor and the penitentiary commissioners is for the security and benefit of the public only, and the fact that a warden's bond is not approved by the governor does not affect its validity as against the warden or his bondsmen;<sup>80</sup> but where the statute requires the keeper of the penitentiary to execute a bond to the state, a bond executed to the governor and his successors in office is not a valid statutory bond and cannot be sued on in the name of the governor.<sup>81</sup>

Fee for attending court

(1) Statute providing that fees of jailer for attending county and quarterly courts shall not exceed a specified amount per day contemplates attendance at special terms of county and quarterly courts held in the courtroom or regular terms wherever held.—Laurel County Fiscal

Court v. Steele, 148 S.W.2d 283, 285 Ky. 407.—Hickman County v. Jackson, 156 S.W. 391, 153 Ky. 551.

(2) Where the county judge holds a special term of the county court or the quarterly court in his own office or in the clerk's office, the jailer is not entitled to any pay for attendance.—Hickman County v. Jackson, supra.

(3) A jailer is not entitled to compensation under the statute for attendance at an examining trial in a criminal case in which the county judge sits merely as a committing magistrate.—Hickman County v. Jackson, supra.

(4) Such statute does not contemplate that the jailer should be paid the specified amount whenever he should attend court.—Laurel County Fiscal Court v. Steele, supra.

(5) In such case the amount to be allowed is a matter within discretion of county fiscal court which is entitled to information which will enable it to exercise its discretion fairly and intelligently.—Laurel County Fiscal Court v. Steele, supra.

(6) A jailer is entitled to a reasonable compensation, not to exceed the amount specified in the statute.—Hickman County v. Jackson, supra.

(7) The amount to which the jailer is entitled under such statute depends on what he did, how long he attended, and the like.—Hickman County v. Jackson, supra.

(8) A claim for compensation under such statute was properly rejected by the fiscal court, where the jailer's claim did not furnish information sufficient to authorize allowance of the claim.—Laurel County Fiscal Court v. Steele, supra.

(9) Right of public officers or em-

A prison official is entitled to receive the compensation prescribed for his office until the end of his term, unless his incumbency is sooner terminated by resignation, by due forfeiture of the office, or by due removal therefrom.<sup>87</sup>

Subject to constitutional limitation or restrictions,<sup>88</sup> statutes which provide for compensation for prison or jail officials or employees, other than the sheriff, for services control as to the amount of the compensation, the conditions under which it is allowable, and other related matters.<sup>89</sup> Among particular officials or employees who are or have been within the purview of such statutes are chaplains,<sup>90</sup> guards,<sup>91</sup> jailers,<sup>92</sup> matrons,<sup>93</sup> prison boards,<sup>94</sup> and wardens.<sup>95</sup>

The power to provide for the compensation of jail officials is sometimes vested in a particular court or board,<sup>96</sup> which must, in so doing, act with-employees to witness' fees see the C. J.S. title Witnesses § 38, also 50 C.J. p 337 note 78, 70 C.J. p 71 notes 54-62.

Fee for services to court

(1) Even though court room was heated by furnace, lighted by electric light, and supplied with city water, jailer was entitled to reasonable compensation, within statutory limit, if he did anything toward making such services available to circuit court.—Talbott v. Caudill, 58 S.W.2d 385, 248 Ky. 146.

(2) Fact that circuit court certified to auditor that jailer furnished fuel, light, and water to court, and that allowance was made for such services was prima facie evidence of correctness and legality of jailer's claim.—Talbott v. Caudill, supra.

Compensation measured by compensation of court attendant

Matron of county jail, in charge of female inmates, and employed under supervision of sheriff in county of second class, was a jail keeper, and, as such, was entitled under statute to same compensation as court attendants of such county.—Roff v. Passaic County, 162 A. 720, 10 N.J.Misc. 1133.

96. In Kentucky

in its statutory powers,<sup>97</sup> and in accordance with valid regulations,<sup>98</sup> and is not authorized to make an order, the effect of which is entirely to deprive such an official of compensation.<sup>99</sup> The authority and duty of a county board to keep and maintain a jail empower it, in the exercise of a reasonable discretion, to employ and pay necessary guards or assistants to the sheriff as keeper of the jail.<sup>1</sup> The determination of the duly authorized body fixing the compensation of a jail official or employee is controlling with respect to the amount of such compensation.<sup>2</sup>

Guards engaged on a monthly compensation are not subject to a deduction of salary while taking a convict before the court under a subpoena.<sup>3</sup>

(2) Such compensation for janitor service should be fixed in advance of the election of the jailer.—Perkins v. Cumberland County, supra.

(3) Where jailer's compensation for janitor service was fixed by fiscal court, only remedy of jailer dissatisfied with the amount so fixed was by appeal from order within sixty days from such order.—Perkins v. Cumberland County, supra.—Wolfe County v. Tolson, 140 S.W.2d 671, 283 Ky. 11.

In Oklahoma

(1) Salaries payable to jailers appointed by sheriff, with approval of board of county commissioners, were to be fixed by board within the limitations prescribed by the statute.—Cavin v. Board of Com'rs of Garfield County, 33 P.2d 477, 168 Okl. 267.

(2) The sheriff did not have power to fix such salaries.—Cavin v. Board of Com'rs of Garfield County, supra.

(3) Such board was authorized to fix such salaries without regard to amount fixed therefor during preceding fiscal year.—Cavin v. Board of Com'rs of Garfield County, supra.

In Pennsylvania

(1) Under the general county law the salaries of jail physician and of deputies are a matter for the county commissioners.—Petition of Pritchard, 30 Pa. Dist. & Co. 367, 85 Pittsb. Leg. J. 676.

(2) The act of April 14, 1835, conferred on the inspectors of the Philadelphia county prison authority to fix the salary or compensation of prison officials and employees.—Schwarz v. City of Philadelphia, 4 A.2d 573, 134 Pa. Super. 544, reversed on other grounds 12 A.2d 294, 337 Pa. 500.—Baldi v. City of Philadelphia, 53 Pa. Dist. & Co. 642—50 C.J. p 337 note 74 [a].

(3) Accordingly, the city council of Philadelphia did not have authority to fix the salaries of such officials or employees.—Baldi v. City of Philadelphia, supra—50 C.J. p 337 note 74 [a].

(4) It has been held or recognized that various subsequent statutes did not repeal such act of April 14, 1835.—Baldi v. City of Philadelphia, supra—50 C.J. p 337 note 74 [a] (1), (2).

(5) If the city council of Philadelphia failed to make an appropriation for the payment of salaries, as fixed by the inspectors, the amounts of salaries were recoverable in an action against the city.—Schwarz v. City of Philadelphia, supra.

(6) It has been held, however, that the act of April 14, 1835, was repealed with respect to the power to fix salaries by the act of May 2, 1945, which was intended to establish a uniform and mandatory system by which all salaries payable out of the public treasury of a city of the first class were to be fixed by the council, in view of a provision of the Statutory Construction Act of May 28, 1937, Pa. Annot. St. tit. 46 § 591, as to repeal by implication.—Page v. City of Philadelphia, 67 Pa. Dist. & Co. 820.

(7) Power to fix salaries of all employees except two caretakers of house of detention for juvenile offenders in Philadelphia has been held lodged with city council and not with board of managers.—Richardson v. City of Philadelphia, 167 A. 573, 312 Pa. 173.

(8) Accordingly, it was held that the council of the city of Philadelphia, and not the prison inspectors had authority to fix the amount of salary of the physician in chief of the Philadelphia county prisons.—Page v. City of Philadelphia, supra.

Estoppel

Where a deputy jailer accepted from the jailer certain amounts as compensation without objection or claim that he was entitled to greater amounts, and with knowledge that another person was also being paid out of the amount allowed by the orders of the fiscal court approving the budgets of the jailer, such deputy jailer was estopped to claim the full amount so allowed, notwithstanding some allowances and reports contained such deputy jailer's name as sole deputy or assistant.—*Moody v. actually incumbent;<sup>7</sup> but a mere intruder has no right to fees or salary for services rendered dur-such usurpation.<sup>8</sup> It has been held that the mere fact that an official in the classified civil service is temporarily assigned to perform the duties of a position of a higher grade pending the filling of such position by a permanent appointment does not entitle such official to the salary of the position to which he is so assigned, under particular regulations.<sup>9</sup> Where a duly appointed officer is unlawfully prevented from performing his duties, he is ordinarily entitled to recover as though he had performed them.<sup>10</sup> An employee who has been properly removed from his position is not entitled to compensation for a period after his removal.<sup>11</sup>

The term "deputies," as used in a constitutional provision for the payment to jailers out of the state treasury, with certain limitations, of the salaries of the deputies of jailers, has been construed to include jail or police matrons and assistant matrons,<sup>12</sup> but not jail physicians.<sup>13</sup>

(2) Change of Compensation

Under proper authorization a change of compensation of a prison or jail official or employee duly made is effective.

Under proper authorization a change of compensation duly made becomes effective.<sup>14</sup> In the absence of provision to the contrary, boards empowered to fix the compensation of prison officials may change such compensation,<sup>15</sup> and an acceptance by the official of reduced compensation may estop him to question the reasonableness of the reduction.<sup>16</sup> A body other than that authorized to fix the salaries of prison employees may not, acting alone, reduce such salaries.<sup>17</sup>

(3) Retirement and Pension

Whether prison or jail employees are entitled to membership in retirement and pension systems, and their rights thereunder if so entitled, depend on the terms of the regulatory statute duly construed.

Pension systems of which prison or jail employees are entitled to become members have been set up under some statutes.<sup>18</sup> Whether a particular employee has this right depends largely on the terms of the statute duly construed.<sup>19</sup> A deputy jailer appointed by the sheriff is not an employee of the county within the meaning of some statutes establishing a retirement and pension system for em-

15. Ariz.—Truman v. Pinal County, 57 P. 65, 6 Ariz. 191, 50 C.J. p 337 note 90.

Civil service employees

(1) The statute providing that no civil service employees shall be discharged until furnished with a written statement of reasons for such action and allowance of reasonable time to answer, and that action of the appointing authority shall not take effect until approved by order of the civil service commission, does not clothe such commission with jurisdiction to review and determine validity of action of local governing body in decreasing the salaries of jail keepers in exercise of power conferred by statute.—Tanis v. Passaic County, 17 A.2d 807, 126 N.J. Law 303.

(2) Where local board of chosen freeholders in general retrenchment of salaries reduced by resolution salaries of county jail keepers twenty-five per cent and those of court attendants twenty per cent, in an action therefor, jail keepers were not entitled to recover difference of five per cent in salaries on ground that local governing body could not under statute lawfully reduce the salaries of jailers below that fixed for court attendants, since action of local board, although erroneous, was a mere irregular exercise of authority and was final until vacated in a direct proceeding.—Tanis v. Passaic County, supra.

delphia, 4 A.2d 573, 134 Pa. Super. 544, reversed on other grounds 12 A.2d 294, 337 Pa. 500.

18. N.J.—Borger v. Board of Chosen Freeholders, 180 A. 495, 13 N. J. Misc. 676.

19. Age of employee

The keeper of a county jail who was in the employ of the county when a pension fund was created by the board of chosen freeholders was entitled to join the system, notwithstanding his age was greater than that specified in a statutory provision that any person of a specified age or over accepting employment in a county shall not be eligible to join a pension fund maintained by the county, on the theory that such keeper was not in the class of persons presently accepting employment in the county.—Borger v. Board of Chosen Freeholders, supra.

Delay in joining

Jail keeper who made application to join county pension fund within two months after county board of freeholders created pension fund was not guilty of laches which barred him from joining fund, notwithstanding for more than five years after passage of statute authorizing creation of pension fund by contributions of county employees and county board of freeholders, and before board of freeholders created fund, jail keeper paid no contributions.—Borger v. Board of Chosen Freeholders, supra.

ployees of counties.<sup>20</sup> Accordingly, the county authorities may not deduct and deposit in the pension fund a percentage of the salary of such a deputy jailer as contemplated by the statute,<sup>21</sup> and such deputy jailer is not entitled to the benefits provided for by such statute.<sup>22</sup>

The test, in determining whether a jail employee has a permanent disability which permanently incapacitates him so as to entitle him to retirement and to a pension under some statutes, is whether the disability permanently incapacitates him from reasonably performing the duties of his position and not whether he would be presently eligible for original appointment.<sup>23</sup>

(4) Expenses

Subject to constitutional restrictions, the expenses of prison or jail officials may be the proper subject of allowance.

The expenses of prison officials or boards must be paid out of the fund provided therefor by law,<sup>24</sup> and although there is no express provision for such allowance, it may be made where the expense is incidental to the performance of a duty imposed or power conferred by law.<sup>25</sup> A statute allowing prison directors a mileage at a specified rate and a certain sum per month for other expenses violates a constitutional provision that such officers shall receive no compensation other than reasonable traveling and other expenses incurred while engaged in the performance of official duties, to be audited as the legislature may direct.<sup>26</sup>

The words "necessary office expenses," as used in a constitutional provision for the payment to jailers out of the state treasury, with certain limitations, of the salaries of jailers and their deputies and necessary office expenses, have been construed to refer to expenses incident and necessary to the proper conduct of the duties of the office of jailer other than the salaries of deputies.<sup>27</sup>

§ 11. — Powers and Duties

Generally speaking, the powers and duties of governing bodies in which is invested the control of prisons, and of officers or employees connected directly with a prison or jail, are such as are conferred and imposed expressly or impliedly by law.

The powers and duties of a board or like body vested with the control of a prison are such as are conferred and imposed on it expressly or impliedly by law,<sup>28</sup> such, for example, as the duties to furnish beds and fuel;<sup>29</sup> to provide for medical and surgical attention;<sup>30</sup> and to see that prisoners are kindly and humanely treated.<sup>31</sup> Usually a majority of the officers constituting a state board of prison commissioners may lawfully hold a meeting and transact such business as the board is authorized to transact.<sup>32</sup>

Jailer or warden. Generally speaking, the powers and duties of a jailer or of a warden, a sheriff acting as such, or like officer, are those defined

Review of determination allowed.

Statute and common law

Duties of a jailer are those prescribed by statute and such as were recognized at common law.—Gowens v. Alamance County, 3 S.E.2d 339, 216 N.C. 107.

Implied powers

(1) By conferring general powers and imposing general duties on officer in charge of state penitentiary, legislature by necessary implication accorded to such officers all those powers which experience has proved necessary, and such as are customarily employed in the management of penal institutions.—State v. Courser, 92 P.2d 264, 199 Wash. 559.

(2) While statutes did not in so many words authorize the superintendent of the state penitentiary to take and keep, as part of his official files and records, pictures and fingerprints of the inmates of such institution, the statute did, in effect, authorize the superintendent to make and retain such records.—State v. Courser, supra.

Sheriff

(1) Sheriff as keeper of the jail had authority under statute to supervise all employees pertaining to safe-keeping of prisoners and operation of jail.—Wichita County v. Vance, Tex.Civ.App., 217 S.W.2d 702, refused no reversible error.

(2) The rule as to operation and maintenance of jail kitchens should be general as it applies to all counties alike, and any discretion in the matter should be granted with preference to sheriff, since he has the responsibility of providing for the personal detention of prisoners.—Wichita County v. Vance, supra.

Records and reports

Records, copies of which the warden of a state prison was authorized and required to report to the governor under an earlier statute, should show judgment of conviction, action of board of prison terms and paroles construing the judgment and fixing the term, and rules and orders of state board of prison directors regarding the conduct and management of state prisons.—Albort v. Smith, 65 P.2d 81, 18 Cal.App.2d 615.

Duties under oath

It has been stated that a jailer's duty under his oath to perform his duties as jailer and to treat humanely prisoners who may be brought to the jail is to prisoners whom the sheriff is required to receive.—Tate v. National Surety Corporation, 200 S.E. 314, 58 Ga.App. 874.

Powers not conferred and duties not imposed

(1) Warden of state prison was neither authorized nor required either to construe judgments of conviction or to report such construction to governor.—Albort v. Smith, 65 P.2d 81, 18 Cal.App.2d 615.

(2) Warden of federal penitentiary was not required at his own expense to ship prisoner's clothing back to prisoner's wife.—Platek v. Aderhold, C.C.A.Ga., 73 F.2d 173.

(3) Warden of state prison was not required to furnish one who had been convicted of crime of robbery in the first degree with copies of grand jury records of indictments involved or a copy of an exhibit used on his trial.—People ex rel. Reed v. Hogan, 55 N.Y.S.2d 71, 269 App.Div. 802.

on, does not authorize the jailer to receive payment of a certificate of deposit belonging to a convict.<sup>48</sup>

Guards and other assistants. Since the county jail is a county institution, the duties performed in its maintenance by the assistants of the jailer or warden are public duties,<sup>49</sup> even though such employees are designated by the sheriff.<sup>50</sup> Workhouse guards having the power of policemen necessary to perform their duties, while so engaged, perform service to the public in aid of the enforcement of law and order.<sup>51</sup> The view has been taken that a statute providing that eight hours shall constitute a day's work for state employees is not applicable to penitentiary employees who are paid annual salaries under a statute passed after the eight-hour law.<sup>52</sup>

§ 12. — Civil Liability in General

While generally a prison official is not personally liable with respect to a determination as to which the exercise of judgment is required, in the absence of malice or fraud, a prison or jail official may be liable where he is chargeable with nonperformance or negligent performance of duties imposed by law.

When the exigencies of a case require an officer of a prison to exercise judgment, his determination thereon is in the nature of a judicial, and not of a ministerial, act, for which, in the absence of malice or fraud, no personal liability is incurred.<sup>53</sup> Generally, however, a sheriff may be liable for nonperformance of duties imposed by law on him as jailer.<sup>54</sup> The liabilities of a jailer do not attach to one who, in case of emergency, looks after the discipline of the convicts and the protection of the property of the state until further notice at the request of a superior official.<sup>55</sup> Where there has been an illegal payment of county funds to a jailer in excess of the amount appropriated for his office, the law raises an implied contract on his part to return the excess amount, for which an action will lie.<sup>56</sup> Under some statutes, however, it has been held that the warden of a jail is not bound to pay into the county treasury money received by him for keeping prisoners from another county, and that an action for money had and received will not lie with respect to such money.<sup>57</sup> A sheriff is not liable to the county for an amount allowed and paid out of county funds for the salary of a guard employed with the approval of the governing body of the county, where such allowance is authorized.<sup>58</sup> If a jailer takes a note for a fine and costs, it is equivalent to the receipt of so much money, and renders the jailer liable for the amount.<sup>59</sup>

Generally, a sheriff is not chargeable with rent for the part of the jail building occupied by him as a residence.<sup>60</sup>

Negligence. A jailer or the sheriff in his capacity as jailer may be liable for the negligent performance of duties imposed on him by law.<sup>61</sup> Accordingly, a jailer may be liable for damages proximately resulting from his negligent failure to keep the prison clean and sanitary,<sup>62</sup> and to see that the prisoners conduct themselves in an orderly manner.<sup>63</sup> Generally, an official connected with a jail is not liable for injuries resulting from a defective condition of the premises, where there was no negligence on his part with respect to such condition and he did not have knowledge of it;<sup>64</sup> nor is he liable for an act which is not the proximate cause of the injury.<sup>65</sup>

65. Tex.—Richardson v. Hills, supra.

While the liability of a sheriff, as jailer, to an attorney for wrongfully preventing such attorney from consulting with his client who is a prisoner has been recognized,<sup>66</sup> it has been held that a statute, making it the duty of officers having custody of prisoners to permit any prisoner to consult an attorney and making such officer liable to the person aggrieved in an action for a specified sum on its violation, gives a right of action only to the person in custody,<sup>67</sup> and not to the attorney.<sup>68</sup>

Acts of subordinates. A jailer or warden may be personally liable for the acts of subordinates appointed by him.<sup>69</sup>

Acts of prisoners. The warden of a state penitentiary has been held not to be liable for a tort committed by a prisoner unless he directly participates in its commission by a breach of duty.<sup>70</sup> It has also been held that officials who are in charge of a jail and have the custody of prisoners are not liable for injuries inflicted by an escaped prisoner, where the negligent or wrongful acts of such officials are not the proximate cause of the injuries.<sup>71</sup>

§ 13. — Liability for Injuries to Prisoners

A jailer or warden may be liable for an injury proximately resulting to a prisoner from a breach of duty with respect to such prisoner.

A jailer or warden, or sheriff acting as such, may be liable for an injury proximately resulting to a prisoner from a breach of duty with respect to the prisoner,<sup>72</sup> as, for example, a breach of duty to exercise due care for the safety of a prisoner generally,<sup>73</sup> to keep the jail sanitary and warm,<sup>74</sup> or to furnish food.<sup>75</sup> A prison official is not liable for failing to furnish attendance and care to a prisoner injured by a fellow prisoner when it does not appear that he knew or should have known of the injury;<sup>76</sup> nor is a city marshal responsible for injuries caused by the unhealthy condition of a cell when it does not appear that he knew of such condition and had control of the cells.<sup>77</sup>

Federal prison officials are not liable to a prisoner for erroneous acts by such officials in their capacity as public officers.<sup>78</sup> It has been held, with respect to an injury sustained by a prisoner in connection with the operation of a machine at which he has been put at work, that, in the absence of statute imposing liability, there is no liability on the part of public officers who are vested with general management or superintendence of the prison,<sup>79</sup> or who have the immediate control of the prisoner.<sup>80</sup> The keeper of a jail is not liable to a prisoner for alleged breach of a duty which is not by law imposed on such keeper.<sup>81</sup> There is no liability where the injury sustained results solely from the acts of the prisoner himself.<sup>82</sup>

Where punishment inflicted on a prisoner is proper and authorized, and not cruel or excessive, and is not inflicted with malice or intent to injure, the officer is not liable for an injury resulting therefrom.<sup>83</sup>

Duties of prison or jail officials to prisoners are discussed generally supra § 11.

Acts of subordinate. While in some jurisdictions a sheriff may be liable for injuries to a prisoner which results from breach of duty by a deputy to whom the sheriff has assigned the duty to care for and protect prisoners,<sup>84</sup> it has been held or recognized that officers who have the power of general management, or who are in direct charge, of a prison or jail are not liable to a prisoner for the act of a subordinate,<sup>85</sup> even though appointed by such an officer under proper legal authority,<sup>86</sup> at least where such an officer neither directed the act complained of,<sup>87</sup> nor was negligent in permitting it.<sup>88</sup> Where there is imposed on such officers a duty to see that prisoners are treated humanely, they may be liable for injuries to prisoners resulting from a system of corporal punishment practiced, of which they either knew<sup>89</sup> or, in the exercise of ordinary care, could have known.<sup>90</sup>

Injuries caused by fellow prisoners. While a breach of a prison or jail official's duty to use reasonable care to prevent injuries to a prisoner by his fellow prisoners may subject him to liability for the injuries proximately caused thereby,<sup>91</sup> he is not liable for an injury of which his act or neglect was not the proximate cause,<sup>92</sup> or where he had no reason to anticipate the injury.<sup>93</sup> Where a jailer or warden knowingly permits one prisoner to assault another, and uses no reasonable means to prevent it, he is liable to the assaulted prisoner.<sup>94</sup>

§ 14. — Liability on Bond

Liability on the bond of a prison or jail official conditioned for the faithful performance of the duties of his office includes liability for breach of duty imposed either by statute or by other valid regulation.

Where a prison or jail official is required to give a bond conditioned for the faithful performance of the duties of his office, such officer and his sureties are bound with respect to the faithful performance of all the duties imposed, whether by statute or by the rules and regulations of the prison directors,<sup>95</sup> but the sureties are not liable with respect to matters not coming within a fair construc-

Possession of weapons

If a jailer whose duty it was to care for and protect his prisoners from harm would in the exercise of ordinary care have discovered the presence of weapons and removed them and thereby prevented the death of one prisoner at the hands of another, jailer and his principal, the sheriff, would be responsible in damages.—Browning v. Graves, supra.

Failure to isolate ill prisoner

Failure of superintendent of health to remove from jail prisoner who had contracted a contagious disease did not relieve sheriff from liability for failure to have prisoner isolated, as regards liability for death of another contracting disease.—Hunt v. Rowton, 288 P. 342, 143 Okl. 181.

"Kangaroo court"

(1) The rule stated in the text has been applied or recognized with respect to acts of a "kangaroo court."—Lamb v. Clark, 138 S.W.2d 350, 282 Ky. 167—50 C.J. p 340 note 62 [a].

(2) Subject to certain qualifications, it has been recognized that the sheriff may be liable with respect to acts of a "kangaroo court."—Eberhart v. Murphy, 194 P. 415, 113 Wash. 449.

(3) Alleged insanitary conduct and abusive language of plaintiff when incarcerated in jail did not justify members of prisoners' "kangaroo court" in assaulting and cruelly beating plaintiff, as regards liability of jailer and his deputy for injuries sustained by plaintiff while in their custody for safe-keeping during period of his detention, and did not constitute a defense to an action against the jailer and his deputy.—Lamb v. Clark, 138 S.W.2d 350, 282 Ky. 167.

Sheriff's bond

(1) The surety on the official bond of a sheriff may be required to respond in damages to any person injured by a breach of duty by the sheriff as jailer.

Neb.—O'Dell v. Goodsell, 30 N.W.2d 906, 149 Neb. 261.

Okl.—Hunt v. Rowton, 288 P. 342, 143 Okl. 181.

50 C.J. p 340 note 64 [a].

(2) Surety on sheriff's bond was liable for the death of a prisoner resulting from the negligence of a tion of the statutes or rules,<sup>96</sup> or with respect to an alleged obligation not imposed on the principal.<sup>97</sup> Some bonds of jail officials are so framed as to preclude recovery thereon by a prisoner who has sustained injury as a result of breach of duty by such an official.<sup>98</sup>

The liability of the sureties on such a bond is a joint one with the officer,<sup>99</sup> and they may be sued, together with the officer, directly on the bond, for his nonfeasance or misfeasance in office, and they will be liable together with him thereon.<sup>1</sup>

§ 15. — Criminal Responsibility

The question whether a prison or jail official is subject to criminal prosecution with respect to official activities depends largely on statutory provisions.

In accordance with the general rule discussed in Criminal Law § 17, a jailer or other person having prisoners in custody is not criminally liable for an act not made punishable by law.<sup>2</sup> Under statutes making a jailer liable for misfeasance or malfeasance in office, or for willful neglect in the discharge of official duties, intent on the part of the jailer to do wrong is essential.<sup>3</sup> It has been held that under a similar provision of the constitution, a jailer is subject to indictment for permitting a jail to become so filthy as to endanger the comfort, health, and lives of prisoners.<sup>4</sup> Jailers have been regarded as officers within a statute subjecting officers to an indictment for official misconduct;<sup>5</sup> and furnishing prisoners with liquor is official misconduct.<sup>6</sup> The superintendent of a penitentiary may be criminally liable for a failure to turn over to his successor moneys coming into his hands from the hire of convicts, the duty to receive which was imposed by statute.<sup>7</sup> In a prosecution under a statute making it a misdemeanor for a sheriff or jailer to refuse to receive persons apprehended for offenses against the state by a constable or other officer, it is no defense that the sheriff refused to receive a prisoner into his custody from a peace officer because no commitment was produced by the officer.<sup>8</sup>

A sheriff is not criminally responsible for the acts of a jailer appointed by him.<sup>9</sup> A member of the board of trustees of a penitentiary is not guilty of official misconduct because the secretary of the board embezzled funds which he was authorized to deposit,<sup>10</sup> or, without authority, sold products of the penitentiary and converted the proceeds.<sup>11</sup>

Prosecution. General rules as to the sufficiency of indictments in criminal cases, stated in Indictments and Informations §§ 90-156, apply to prosecutions for offenses of the type here under consideration.<sup>12</sup> So, also, general rules as to instructions in jailer, acting for the sheriff, in confining such prisoner with an insane prisoner by whom the deceased prisoner was attacked.—Dunn v. Swanson, 7 S.E.2d 563, 217 N.C. 279.

(3) Judgment against the surety on a sheriff's bond was upheld where the alleged breach of duty by the sheriff was failure to isolate a prisoner who had contracted a contagious disease.—Hunt v. Rowton, 288 P. 342, 143 Okl. 181.

96. Mich.—Hulin v. People, 31 Mich. 333.

Moneys illegally received

Where jailer's bond provided that jailer would faithfully discharge duties of his office and pay over to all parties entitled thereto any funds that came into his hands by virtue of his office as jailer, sureties on bond were not liable for sums paid jailer for heating and lighting courthouse in excess of the sum appropriated by the fiscal court, since sums paid the jailer illegally were not within contemplation of the bond.—Wolfe County v. Tolson, 140 S.W.2d 671, 283 Ky. 11.

Duty enjoined by law

(1) The warden of a penitentiary was not subject to prosecution under a statute defining as an offense willful neglect or omission of a public officer to perform a duty enjoined by law, where the alleged offense was failure to comply with the rules and regulations of the supervising department.—People v. McCann, 273 N.Y.S. 839, 151 Misc. 792, affirmed 275 N.Y.S. 837, 242 App.Div. 515.

(2) In this connection the view was taken that a duty enjoined by law within the meaning of the statute is a duty enjoined by statute; therefore, that the alleged offense was not within the purview of the statute.—People v. McCann, supra.

§ 16. — Actions by or against

Rules as to matters of procedure applicable in civil actions generally apply in actions involving prison or jail officials.

Under a statute providing that all suits necessary to protect the rights of the state connected with the penitentiary shall be prosecuted in the name of the board of directors, a suit against a warden to secure funds of the state unlawfully converted by him is properly prosecuted in the name of the board.<sup>14</sup>

The general rules governing civil actions apply in an action by or against prison officers and employees with respect to pleading,<sup>15</sup> evidence,<sup>16</sup> questions of law and fact,<sup>17</sup> and instructions.<sup>18</sup>

Damages. The right to recover punitive damages in an action against a jail official for an injury to a prisoner resulting from a breach of duty imposed on such official has apparently been recognized, where the facts warrant such recovery,<sup>19</sup> but it has been held that, where, in such an action, the surety on the bond of defendant official is a party defendant, exemplary damages may not be awarded against the surety,<sup>20</sup> the measure of damages of the surety being limited to compensation for the actual injury.<sup>21</sup>

13. Instruction as to union of act and intent

In prosecution of former warden of state penitentiary for alleged negligent failure to discover derelictions of chief clerk of penitentiary, the court in connection with proper definition of criminal negligence should have given as instruction substance of statute requiring that in every crime there must exist a union of act and intent or criminal negligence.—State v. Taylor, 87 P.2d 454, 59 Idaho 724.

14. Wash.—Nye v. Kelly, 53 P. 523, 19 Wash. 73.

15. Essential allegations

(1) In an action by a prisoner against a warden for assault and battery and other indignities committed by the warden, by virtue of his office, it was necessary to allege that the injuries did not result as the consequence of plaintiff's wrongful or unlawful acts.—Stephens v. Conley, 138 P. 189, 48 Mont. 352, Ann.Cas.1915D 958.

(2) A complaint for cruel and unusual punishment was defective where it failed to allege that the acts complained of were not in accordance with the regulations of the prison or of law, or that they were not necessary for the proper punishment of plaintiff, or to secure submission and obedience on his part.—Wightman v. Brush, 10 N.Y.S. 76, 56 Hun 647.

Determination of sufficiency

Where petition alleged that town marshal and deputy placed belligerently intoxicated prisoner in unlocked cell and that there were locks with cells in which prisoners could be individually locked up by marshal and deputy, it was permissible to treat marshal and deputy as jailers, or coofficers in charge of jail, in determining whether exceptions of no cause and right of action for injuries inflicted on fellow prisoner were properly sustained.—*Honeycutt v. Prison funds have been held chargeable with the expense of meals furnished to prison inspectors while at the prison in the discharge of their official duties;<sup>24</sup> and such funds have also been held chargeable with the expenses of a journey made by the inspectors and the warden to inspect and become familiar with the use of a machine which the inspectors were authorized to buy to enable the warden to make a registry of all convicts under his care.<sup>25</sup>

b. Contracts

The general rules as to the requisites of a valid contract are applicable to contracts by prison officials relating to the care, custody, and maintenance of prisoners or prison property. While there must be a compliance with statutory requirements, in the absence of a statute so providing, a contract for material for a house of detention, entered into by its board of managers, need not be in writing; nor need it be advertised.

The general rules as to the requisites of a valid contract are applicable to contracts by prison officials relating to the care, custody, and maintenance of prisoners or prison property.<sup>26</sup> While there must be a compliance with statutory requirements, such as that the contract must be in writing,<sup>27</sup> and that it must be approved by a board,<sup>28</sup> in the absence of a statute so providing, it is not necessary that a contract for material for a house of detention, entered into by its board of managers, be in writing,<sup>29</sup> or that it be advertised.<sup>30</sup> Furthermore, a contract between the county commissioners and the managers of a workhouse, whereby the latter agree to receive prisoners sentenced from the county, has been held not rendered void because of an omission by the commissioners subsequently to advertise the making of such contract as required by statute.<sup>31</sup> Also, a contract made by prison inspectors has been held not abrogated by a subsequent statute superseding all prior laws relating to the management of penal institutions but expressly saving existing rights.<sup>32</sup>

Personal liability. In the absence of a clear expression by a prison official of an intent to incur personal responsibility,<sup>33</sup> as a general rule, such an official is not liable personally on a contract made by him in good faith on behalf of the prison, although he exceeds his authority in so doing,<sup>34</sup> where the other party to the contract either has full knowledge of the extent of the authority of the official,<sup>35</sup> or has equal means of acquiring such knowledge.<sup>36</sup> While a warden may not be personally liable on a contract entered into by him by virtue of the powers vested in him by law,<sup>37</sup> he may make himself personally liable by the terms of the contract.<sup>38</sup>

tention to patients of county confined in county jail has been held not to imply power in jail physician to bind county to pay cost of surgical treatment of prisoner by city hospital.—Lauderdale County v. City of Memphis, 71 S.W.2d 686, 167 Tenn. 493.

or a prison, including the premises and the equipment thereof and the labor of the prisoners therein, may be granted to an official or a board by statute.<sup>39</sup> Under some statutory provisions, a board is given the authority to lease penitentiary grounds, shops, machinery therein, and other property of the prison, as well as the labor of the prisoners therein,<sup>40</sup> and it has been held within the powers of a board having supervision of prisons to provide by contract for the feeding and clothing of prisoners in the penitentiary as one of the considerations for the leasing of their labor.<sup>41</sup>

Leases of this nature entered into by officials or boards should not exceed the authority granted by statute.<sup>42</sup> Thus, under a statute empowering an official to make a lease of the premises of a prison for a period not to exceed a certain length of time, such official may not make a lease of the premises for a longer period.<sup>43</sup> Also, a statute authorizing prison authorities to lease the prison shops and such vacant grounds as they deem proper has been held to authorize them to lease only the shops, buildings, and grounds owned by the state at the time of the execution of the lease or during its continuance,<sup>44</sup> and does not authorize them to bind the state by a covenant to supply other or additional shops or grounds.<sup>45</sup>

The lessee of a state penitentiary has been held liable in assumpsit for work performed by one who was illegally imprisoned.<sup>46</sup>

Where a lease provides for payment by the state to the lessee of a certain amount each month, the measure of damages for a breach of the contract is the amount so named.<sup>47</sup>

Transfer of lease. Where an act of the legislature to aid in the construction of a railroad authorized the lessees of the penitentiary to transfer such lease of it and of the convicts "for the unexpired term thereof" to the railroad, and provided that, on execution of the transfer, the lessees should be released from any further liability to the state, a transfer not made until nineteen months after the passage of the act is not a compliance therewith and does not release the lessees or the sureties on their bond from liability under the lease up to the time of the transfer.<sup>48</sup>

(2) Rent

Under a lease of a penitentiary, including the labor of the convicts and the premises and equipment of the penitentiary, the liability of the lessee to pay rent may depend on compliance by the state with its undertaking to permit him to enjoy uninterrupted possession of the premises, machinery, fixtures, etc., and to employ the convicts at such labor as will be most profitable.

Under a lease of a penitentiary including the labor of the convicts and the premises and equipment of the penitentiary, the liability of the lessee to pay rent may depend on compliance by the state with its undertaking to permit him to enjoy uninterrupted possession of the premises, machinery, fixtures, etc., and to employ the convicts at such labor as will be most profitable.<sup>49</sup> While it has been held that the state has the right, notwithstanding such a lease, to make necessary and proper improvements to the prison,<sup>50</sup> it has also been held that the lessee has the right to set off against the rent such damages as he has sustained by reason of the interference with his use of the premises and of the convicts occasioned by the improvement.<sup>51</sup>

A statute authorizing the superintendent, with the governor's approval, to make such improvements in the penitentiary as he deems advisable, not to exceed the sum to be paid by the lessees, and providing that amounts due the state from the lessees shall not be expended or appropriated for any other purpose, appropriates for improvements only such amounts as, in the judgment of the superintendent and the governor, are needed, and does not create a contract with the lessees that all the rent shall be expended for improvements.<sup>52</sup> Where a lease provides that the annual rent shall be a certain amount "net," this means that the state shall

years, with an automatic renewal clause for further periods of three years, the lessor being obligated to give notice of his intention one year before the termination of one of such periods, is in violation of a statute providing that the lease shall not be for a longer period than three years.—Moyer v. #### d. Purchase of Supplies

By virtue of statute, various officials have been held authorized to purchase supplies for prisons or jails, but the authority of an official in this respect is limited by the enactment empowering him to make such purchases, and, unless the power is duly granted to him, he may not exercise it. A prison official may be compelled by mandate to fulfill the duties imposed on him by statute with respect to the purchase of, and the payment for, supplies.

By virtue of statute, various officials have been held authorized to purchase supplies for prisons or jails.<sup>54</sup> Under some statutory provisions, certain officials are authorized to purchase supplies for a prison, in order to secure the prisoners against escape, sickness, and infection;<sup>55</sup> and, under a statute requiring a jail to be kept in good and sufficient condition and giving the sheriff the custody, keeping, and charge of the jail, such official has been held to have full authority to purchase all supplies necessary to keep the jail in good and sufficient condition.<sup>56</sup> So, too, where a statute requires the sheriff to furnish necessary articles for prisoners and provides that all charges for keeping and maintaining prisoners shall be paid from the county treasury, the sheriff may procure necessary articles on the credit of the county, and the person from whom they were purchased may maintain an action directly against the county for the purchase price.<sup>57</sup> Also, where a statute requires the various counties to maintain jails at their expense, the county supervisors have been held to have, without any express provision to that effect, authority to purchase on behalf of the county the necessary furnishing for the jail.<sup>58</sup>

supplies is, on the other hand, limited by the enactment empowering him to do so,<sup>59</sup> and, in making such purchases, officials must be governed by the statutory regulations on the subject.<sup>60</sup> Unless the authority to purchase supplies is duly granted to him, an official may not exercise it,<sup>61</sup> and the governing body maintaining the prison or jail is not liable for a purchase made by an unauthorized official;<sup>62</sup> nor is it liable for purchases made by an official in excess of his authority.<sup>63</sup>

A prison official may be compelled by mandate to fulfill the duties imposed on him by statute with respect to the purchase of, and payment for, supplies.<sup>64</sup> It has been held that independent of statute an action may be maintained on the relation of the warden of a penitentiary against the board of purchase and supplies to require it to provide the necessities for the support of the penitentiary.<sup>65</sup>

e. Enforcement of Claims against Prisons

Ordinarily, an action may not be maintained against a prison official for the breach of a contract in pursuance of, and strictly within, the limitations of statutory authority; after an award is made under a statutory submission of a suit or controversy with respect to a claim or contract on account of a prison, the claimants may not be deprived of their rights by subsequent legislation.

Unless permitted by statute, an action may not be maintained against a warden or other prison official for the breach of a contract in pursuance of, and strictly within, the limitations of statutory authority.<sup>66</sup> A general statute providing that, when any controversy arises or any suit is pending with respect to any contract or claim on account of the state prison, the warden may submit it to the determination of arbitrators or referees to be approved by the inspectors is not pro tanto repealed by a resolution of the legislature authorizing certain

Ordinarily, a jailer or like prison official has a certain amount of discretion with respect to the safe-keeping, security, and discipline of his prisoners; and his acts, in this respect, should be upheld, if reasonably necessary to effectuate the purpose of imprisonment, so that the court will not interfere, where it does not appear that he has misused his power for the purpose of oppression.

Ordinarily, a jailer or like prison official is vested with a certain amount of discretion with respect to the safe-keeping, security, and discipline of his prisoners;<sup>69</sup> and his acts, in this respect, should be upheld, if reasonably necessary to effectuate the purpose of imprisonment,<sup>70</sup> so that the courts will not interfere, where it does not appear that he has misused his power for the purpose of oppression.<sup>71</sup> Under some statutory provisions, the department of public welfare has the duty of supervising the conduct of prisoners while they are confined in penal institutions or are on parole.<sup>72</sup>

As to federal penitentiaries or prisons. It is within the power of congress to provide for the proper care and treatment of federal prisoners during the period of their incarceration,<sup>73</sup> and to set up any form of administrative machinery that it deems necessary for such purpose,<sup>74</sup> and the federal courts have no jurisdiction or power to superintend,<sup>75</sup> or interfere with,<sup>76</sup> the discipline of a federal penitentiary or prison. A prisoner in a federal penitentiary who persists in abusing a privilege or opportunity extended to all prison inmates may not complain of unequal treatment if the privilege is taken away from him.<sup>77</sup>

b. Receiving and Holding Prisoners and Their Children; Turning Over to Successor

Ordinarily, a sheriff, warden, jailer, or other prison official has the duty to receive and keep safely in prison all prisoners properly committed until their discharge by law, but a jailer need not receive a person without sufficient written evidence of authority to receive and hold him; a sheriff should turn over to his successor in office the jail and prisoners therein.

ers properly committed until their discharge by law. On the other hand, although a jailer, if he sees fit, may waive his right to insist on sufficient written evidence of his authority to receive and hold a prospective prisoner, without rendering himself or the sheriff liable for any consequences which may follow,<sup>80</sup> he need not receive a debtor or other person, as prisoner, without sufficient written evidence of authority to receive and hold him,<sup>81</sup> and he may not be held liable, in such a case, for his refusal to do so,<sup>82</sup> regardless of his motive.<sup>83</sup> By virtue of statute, a sheriff may have the right to refuse to receive any prisoner who is not charged with, or guilty of, an indictable offense.<sup>84</sup>

Turning over to successor. It is the duty of the sheriff on the election and qualification of his successor to turn over to the latter the jail and the prisoners therein;<sup>85</sup> and the new sheriff has no control over or power to hold prisoners who are not so assigned.<sup>86</sup>

Children of prisoner. The superintendent of a workhouse may not lawfully receive an inmate's child into that institution or permit it to remain therein even on payment of its board,<sup>87</sup> and on the conviction of crime of a mother, her young children will not be permitted to accompany her to the penitentiary.<sup>88</sup>

c. Censorship and Control of Prisoners' Mail

The prison authorities may properly regulate and control the mail of a prisoner.

The prison authorities may properly regulate and control the mail of a prisoner,<sup>89</sup> and the withholding of mail from a prisoner has been held purely a matter of prison regulation within the administrative discretion of the warden and not within the jurisdiction of the court.<sup>90</sup> Furthermore, a requirement that outgoing letters from prisoners be censored by the prison authorities has been held valid,<sup>91</sup> and the prison authorities may, in a proper case, refuse a prisoner permission to mail a letter, without interference by the court.<sup>92</sup> However, in some instances, provision has been made for the mailing of uncensored letters by prisoners,<sup>93</sup> and it has been held that prison authorities must not prevent freedom of communication by prisoners with the courts, executive officers, or counsel.<sup>94</sup>

d. Employment of Prisoners

In the absence of statutory permission, a prisoner may not be employed at hard labor, but, by virtue of some statutory provisions, a person sentenced to a workhouse may be kept at hard labor.

In the absence of statutory permission, prisoners may not be employed at hard labor,<sup>95</sup> since such employment would be the imposition of an addi-

Derogatory comments on prison management

Refusal of prison authorities to permit prisoner to mail a lesson sheet of a correspondence course because of derogatory comments therein pertaining to prison management, and statement of prisoner therein that he enrolled in course because he intended to write a book exposing prison brutality, with admonition that prisoner would not be allowed to proceed with course unless he changed his tactics, did not constitute a denial of prisoner's constitutional rights, and did not present a case cognizable by district court.—Numer v. Miller, supra.

"Prisoners' mail box"

The establishment of a "prisoners' mail box," the procedure through which prisoners in federal penitentiaries may write letters, uncensored in the institution, to the director of the federal bureau of prisons, provides a method by which a prisoner may have access to administrative relief for mistreatment.—Lowe v. Hiatt, supra.

e. Privilege of Prison Bounds

The tendency of modern legislation on the subject of imprisonment for debt is to render it as little irksome as possible, so that it constitutes scarcely a privation of liberty, by the establishment of what are termed "prison bounds," "jail liberties," "jail limits," or "jail yards," which are designated areas, usually of considerable extent, within which the prisoner is permitted to go at liberty on giving a bond that he will not go beyond the prescribed limits.

The tendency of modern legislation on the subject of imprisonment for debt is to render it as little irksome as possible, so that it constitutes scarcely a privation of liberty,<sup>99</sup> by the establishment of what are termed "prison bounds," "jail liberties," "jail limits," or "jail yards," which are designated areas, usually of considerable extent, within which the prisoner is permitted to go at liberty on giving bond that he will not go beyond the prescribed limits.<sup>1</sup> Such areas are generally considered to be, in effect, an extension of the walls of the jail.<sup>2</sup> The functions of a jailer, or like prison official, in allowing prisoners such liberties is administrative in character.<sup>3</sup>

While a sheriff may have no control over the body of a debtor after a bond for jail liberties has been given,<sup>4</sup> a debtor within the prison rules is still a true prisoner in the eyes of the law.<sup>5</sup> The word "committed" in a statute providing for jail liberties for persons committed to jail has been distinguished from the word "convicted," so as to make the statute applicable to persons committed to jail in civil cases rather than to one imprisoned for a criminal offense.<sup>6</sup>

A prisoner is not to be allowed untrammelled intercourse with the outside world, and a jailer, or like prison official, may require persons seeking admission to the jail or prison, as visitors, to submit their persons to a proper and orderly examination or search, although he may not search such persons by force or without their consent.

A prisoner is not to be allowed untrammelled intercourse with the outside world,<sup>7</sup> and, by virtue of some statutory provisions, no person, with certain exceptions, may be allowed access to a prisoner in solitary confinement awaiting the infliction of the punishment of death, without an order of the court.<sup>8</sup> Under such a statute, substantial and persuasive reasons should exist for the entry of an order authorizing an excluded person to visit a

In the statute providing that, in counties having a certain population, the highway commission shall have exclusive power to appoint any guards necessary for the working of prisoners on the public roads of the counties, the provisions that the appointment of guards shall be approved by the sheriff of the county are too plain to be disregarded.—State ex rel. #### Prisoner's photographer and physician

An application by city prison inmate, awaiting grand jury action, for permission to bring photographer into prison to make photographs of applicant and to have his physician examine him at prison for evidentiary purposes, will be denied, in view of his right to have appropriate notations respecting his injuries and physical appearance made by prison physician and when applicant appears in magistrate's court.—People v. Right to search visitors. A jailer or like prison official may require persons seeking admission to the jail or prison, as visitors, to submit their persons to a proper and orderly examination or search,<sup>11</sup> or permit visitors to enter without being searched if, in his opinion, they are proper persons to be relieved of that formality.<sup>12</sup> If visitors do not consent to be searched, they may be refused admittance,<sup>13</sup> required to depart,<sup>14</sup> or they may be ejected;<sup>15</sup> but a jailer or like prison official has no authority to search them by force or without their consent.<sup>16</sup>

(2) Prisoner's Attorney

A jailer, or like prison official, has a certain discretion as to admitting attorneys to jail or prison for the purpose of seeing clients, and such visits by an attorney are subject to being regulated by reasonable rules with which he must comply, but an opportunity to consult counsel must be preserved to a prisoner, and a jailer, or like prison official, may not arbitrarily deny a prisoner confined in jail or prison the privilege of conferring with counsel.

A jailer, or like prison official, has a certain discretion as to admitting attorneys to jail or prison for the purpose of seeing clients,<sup>17</sup> and such visits by an attorney are subject to being regulated by reasonable rules with which he must comply.<sup>18</sup> The rights of an attorney in this respect are not unlimited,<sup>19</sup> and, similarly, the right of a prisoner to consult with an attorney is not an unlimited one.<sup>20</sup> On the other hand, an opportunity to consult counsel must be preserved to a prisoner,<sup>21</sup> and a jailer, or like prison official, may not arbitrarily deny a prisoner confined in jail or prison the privilege of conferring with counsel;<sup>22</sup> nor may he arbitrarily deny an attorney the right to consult with his client who is confined in jail or prison;<sup>23</sup> and these rights apparently apply as to a person confined in jail or prison as a witness.<sup>24</sup>

prisons over certain prisoners may not be limited by an order of a sentencing judge directing that such prisoners remain in a designated jail within the geographic jurisdiction of the court pending an appeal from their convictions, even though they elect not to commence service of their sentences pending appeal.<sup>27</sup>

Where a statute so provides, persons detained for trial on criminal charges should not be put or kept in the same room with prisoners under sentence,<sup>28</sup> and the same is true with respect to persons detained as witnesses.<sup>29</sup> Moreover, persons detained as witnesses have been held to be within a statute providing that persons held on civil process shall not be confined in a room with those arrested on a criminal charge.<sup>30</sup> A sheriff may be liable to punishment if, without strong circumstances of excuse, he should put a debtor in a cell set apart for felons;<sup>31</sup> and a fortiori he may not be punished for refraining from placing a debtor in such a cell without some strong reason for so doing.<sup>32</sup>

It has been held that, if a sheriff is to be imprisoned, he may not be confined in the county jail, but the coroner is left to the common-law rule by which he may make his own home or any other place a prison.<sup>33</sup>

(2) A prisoner sentenced in the District of Columbia under Indeterminate Sentence and Parole Act was lawfully transferred to federal penitentiary outside of District of Columbia.—Bracey v. Zerbst, C.C.A. Kan., 93 F.2d 8.

(3) Persons electing not to commence service of sentences pending appeal from conviction of offenses against the United States and thereupon committed to county jail within geographic jurisdiction of sentencing court were properly removed, notwithstanding their protests, by order of the director of United States prisons to a federal correctional institution beyond the jurisdictional limits of sentencing court, but within the circuit of appellate court having jurisdiction of nature is remedial,<sup>35</sup> and should be given a liberal construction,<sup>36</sup> so as to apply to prisoners confined under sentences pronounced before, as well as after, its passage,<sup>37</sup> and, ordinarily, a written order is unnecessary to make such a transfer.<sup>38</sup>

On the other hand a transfer or removal of a prisoner should be made only by the authorities designated by statute for the purpose,<sup>39</sup> and only in the cases provided for.<sup>40</sup> Transfers should not be made arbitrarily,<sup>41</sup> or in excess of the powers delegated to the authorities,<sup>42</sup> or contrary to express legislative classifications,<sup>43</sup> so that, where such a transfer is made, it has been held void,<sup>44</sup> and the authorities have been directed to return the prisoner to the proper place of confinement.<sup>45</sup> Moreover, an official may not be required to transfer a prisoner from one institution to another in the absence of good cause shown, even though he has the authority to make such a transfer.<sup>46</sup>

Change of location of jail. By virtue of some statutory provisions, it is the duty of certain officials to remove prisoners to a newly located state prison where the location of such prison has been changed after their incarceration.<sup>47</sup> Where a person convicted of a crime against the United States is sentenced to a state jail, the keeper of such jail has been held authorized to remove such prisoner to another place to which the jail has been removed by the authority of the state legislature.<sup>48</sup>

Repeal by implication

A statute relating to the transfer of prisoners, purporting to revise the entire subject matter covered by an earlier statute and containing additional provisions for carrying into effect the same objects as the earlier statute, repeals the earlier statute by implication, although no reference is made thereto.—Ex parte Burns, Okl.Cr., 202 P.2d 433.—Ex parte Olden, Okl.Cr., 199 P.2d 228, overruling Ex parte Neighbors, 187 P.2d 276, 85 Okl.Cr. 183.—Ex parte Himes, Okl.Cr., 199 P.2d 226.

What constitutes good cause

(1) Fact that persons convicted in District of Columbia were, because confined at Atlanta, eligible for parole only after serving one third of term, but could be paroled after serving one fifth of term, under subsequent retroactive statute, if confined in District of Columbia, has been held not to empower court to require transfer.—*Aderhold v. ably necessary during his incarceration.<sup>49</sup> Under some statutes, a prisoner in a state prison, in a proper case, may be transferred to a state hospital,<sup>50</sup> such as a hospital for the insane,<sup>51</sup> and a statute authorizing an official to remove a prisoner to a state hospital for the insane enters into, and becomes part of, a sentence as though spread on the record with the sentence.<sup>52</sup> The purpose of such a statute is to provide a proper method for such a transfer when the best interests of the prisoner and the other inmates require it,<sup>53</sup> and, under such a statute, the determination of the prisoner's sanity by the designated official has been held an administrative function,<sup>54</sup> which he may exercise without notice to the prisoner,<sup>55</sup> or without giving him an opportunity to be heard or to present evidence as to his sanity.<sup>56</sup>

Where a statute requires the maintenance of hospital quarters in a jail having a "large number" of prisoners, hospital facilities nearest at hand must be used for sick prisoners in jails to which the statute does not apply.<sup>57</sup> Where a prisoner, selected by the county supervisor to work the roads has become ill and has been sent to the penitentiary which has offered its facilities for the treatment of such prisoners, on a refusal, after the prisoner's recovery, to redeliver him, the burden is on the superintendent of the penitentiary to show that the custody of the convict has been unconditionally delivered.<sup>58</sup>

In case of contagious disease. A prisoner found to have a contagious disease should be removed and isolated to some room or place having no connection with the other prisoners.<sup>59</sup>

§ 20. Discharge of Prisoners

- a. In general
- b. On expiration of term of imprisonment

a. In General

A prisoner may not be discharged before the expiration, by law, of the term of imprisonment duly imposed on him except by proper authority exercised in the manner prescribed by law; provision may be made by statute for the payment of a gratuity to a prisoner on his discharge.

A prisoner may not be discharged before the expiration, by law, of the term of imprisonment duly imposed on him except by proper authority exercised in the manner prescribed by law,<sup>60</sup> and it has been held that, in order to entitle a prisoner to his release, an order purporting to affect the terms of his commitment must be served on the warden.<sup>61</sup> A certificate of discharge of a prisoner relating to a conviction for one offense does not operate to discharge him from an uncompleted sentence for another offense.<sup>62</sup> A statute author-

51. N.Y.—Troutman v. State, supra.

Length of confinement

A prisoner was not unlawfully confined at state hospital for the insane on ground that his confinement was permanent, where, under governor's order by which prisoner was transferred from prison to hospital for insane, his commitment was for such time as added to the time already served by such prisoner will equal the terms of his original sentences.—Ex parte Soborsky, 199 A. 757, 109 Vt. 476.

Suitable place

Where a jailer discovers that one of the prisoners is suffering from a contagious disease, he should remove him to a suitable place and keep him there until he has served his sentence.—Matter of Boyce, 88 N.Y.S. 841, 43 Misc. 297—50 C.J. p 345 note 92.

In bastardy proceedings see Bastards § 117 b.

Under execution against person see Executions §§ 429-449.

Rearrest after illegal discharge see Arrest § 21.

Power of supreme court

As respects sheriff's duty to obey order of supreme court justice directing sheriff to release and discharge prisoner, supreme court had complete power to grant, modify, and vacate order of arrest and finally pass on bail.—Lang v. Dreyer, 9 N.Y.S.2d 970, 170 Misc. 207.

When pardon is granted, a jailer must liberate his prisoner.—In re Biegle, 5 Ohio S. & C.P. 583, 7 Ohio N.P. 561—50 C.J. p 346 note 4.

61. Cal.—Ex parte Sargen, 27 P.2d 407, 135 Cal.App. 402.

Reason for rule

State prison warden, not being required to attend hearing of proceeding, in which prisoner, temporarily removed from his custody, appears as witness, or charged with constructive notice of what happens therein, order, made therein, purporting to affect terms of prisoner's commitment, must be served on warden to entitle prisoner to release.—Ex parte Sargen, supra.

62. U.S.—Banks v. O'Grady, C.C.A. Neb., 113 F.2d 926.

izing workhouse commissioners to discharge a prisoner under certain circumstances, even if constitutional, does not authorize them to discharge a person sentenced to a term in the workhouse where such sentence has been suspended and the person has never been sent to the workhouse.<sup>63</sup>

A sheriff is not authorized to discharge a prisoner not arrested by him or his deputy by a statute providing that a prisoner who is arrested, charged with a misdemeanor, and held to answer it, or who is arrested by virtue of a capias or an indictment for a misdemeanor, shall be discharged by the committing magistrate or officer making the arrest under a capias on his own recognizance without security.<sup>64</sup> After a prisoner has been admitted to the liberty of the jail limits on giving a bond, the sheriff no longer has any power to discharge him.<sup>65</sup>

Gratuities to discharged prisoners. Provision may be made by statute for the payment of a gratuity to a prisoner on his discharge.<sup>66</sup> Under some statutes, where a prisoner is ordered resentenced, he is ordinarily not discharged from prison so as to be entitled to a statutory allowance of money,<sup>67</sup> but, if the resentence does not provide for his incarceration in a state prison, he is entitled to such an allowance.<sup>68</sup> The intent of the legislature is controlling in determining whether a later statute on the subject of gratuities to prisoners repeals earlier statutes on the same subject.<sup>69</sup>

b. On Expiration of Term of Imprisonment

On the expiration of his term of imprisonment, a prisoner is entitled to be discharged in the absence of any legal justification for his further detention.

On expiration of term of imprisonment, a prisoner is entitled to be discharged in the absence of any legal justification for his further detention,<sup>70</sup> and the head of a penal institution may not hold a prisoner in confinement after the expiration of the term provided in the commitment under which he is held.<sup>71</sup> Moreover, the jurisdiction of a parole board to continue the incarceration of a prisoner ceases at the expiration of the maximum punishment fixed by statute for the crime for which

Second offense while on parole

Where prisoner at large under a parole was convicted of another offense and sentenced to penitentiary, a certificate of discharge at conclusion of prisoner's punishment for his second offense, which showed on its face that it related only to conviction for second offense, did not operate to discharge sentence for first offense which had not been completed.—Banks v. O'Grady, supra.

Discretion of official

Under some statutory provisions a prisoner released by a final discharge is entitled only to such suitable clothing and such sum of money, not to exceed a stated sum, as may be authorized by the attorney general in his discretion.—Carroll v. U. S., supra.

68. N.Y.—O'Keefe v. Wilson, supra.

prisoner imposing indeterminate sentence and suspending execution thereof amounted to discharge from state's prison with respect to prisoner's right to statutory allowance.—O'Keefe v. Wilson, supra.

50 C.J. p 346 note 2.

Recommendation of court under parole act

Trial court's recommendation as to minimum and maximum duration of the imprisonment under the parole act is part of the sentence, and, where the duration of imprisonment has expired in accordance with the recommendation, the prisoner must be discharged.—People v. Montana, supra.

Failure to provide employment

(1) In determining whether a prisoner is entitled to his discharge as having completed his sentence one sentenced to imprisonment and payment of fine and costs, being required by statute to work each day that he is able, has been held entitled to credit of stated sum for each day on which he is physically able and willing to work until full payment of fine and costs, even though board of supervisors fails to furnish him work and facilities or means therefor, as required by statute, and code sections associated with section containing provision, stricken by amendatory act, that no convict shall be credited with wages while in jail and not at work entitle convict to credit of such sum on his fine and costs for each day spent in jail when ready, able, and willing to work, regardless of title of amendatory act, "An Act to amend [such section] so as to credit convicts with time served in jail."—Ex parte Jackson, 171 So. 545, 177 Miss. 509.

(2) However, it has also been held that, under a statute by which a prisoner may work out his fine and costs, a person, under sentence for breach of ordinance, is not entitled to discharge without satisfying sentence, notwithstanding failure of city, after notice, to provide employment for working out fine and costs.—Scholl v. Heumpreus, 14 P. 2d 656, 136 Kan. 265.

71. Ky.—Commonwealth v. Crawford, 147 S.W.2d 1019, 285 Ky. 382.

Where unlawfully detained

A warrant of commitment of a prisoner should distinctly state the terms on which he is entitled to his discharge, and, if the prisoner, after having complied with the terms of his sentence, is unlawfully detained by the keeper, he may be freed from his illegal restraint by appropriate process.—Kenney v. State, 5 R.I. 385—13 C.J. p 929 note 69.

he is imprisoned, at which time he should be discharged by the prison authorities.<sup>72</sup> It has been held that on proper notice of a reversal of a conviction it is the duty of a warden to remand his prisoner to the custody of the sheriff.<sup>73</sup> On the other hand, an escaped prisoner who has been convicted and sentenced for another crime may, at the expiration of the latter sentence, be held to serve out the remainder of the first sentence,<sup>74</sup> and one having completed a sentence for escape may be subject to being held on a detainer lodged for a crime committed during his escape.<sup>75</sup>

Power of legislature

The legislature has the power to authorize by statute the reduction of sentences of convicts as a reward for their good conduct and behavior.—Ex parte Anderson, 192 S.W.2d 280, 149 Tex.Cr. 139.

Preferential treatment

A prisoner whose statutory rights as of the date of his crime were not diminished by preferential treatment to another group of prisoners has no grievance for which resort may be had to the courts, and redress may only be sought or complaint made to the legislature.—Cook v. Lawes, 285 N.Y.S. 588, 247 App.Div. 735, affirmed 3 N.E.2d 191, 271 N.Y. 574—People ex rel. Ascher v. Lawes, 276 N.Y.S. 322, 243 App. Div. 578—Keith v. ### Credit under void sentence

Where convictions were void, but defendant had served time under void sentences, if defendant should be tried and convicted on any one of the original indictments pending against him, he should receive proper credit for good conduct if, under pertinent rules and regulations of state authorities, he is entitled to such credit.—Stonebreaker v. ## a. In General

The right to a reduction of the term of imprisonment to which a prisoner has been sentenced as a reward for good conduct during his confinement, or credit for "good time," as it is sometimes called, is purely statutory, and may be acquired only in the manner and under the circumstances pointed out by statute.

The right to a reduction of the term of imprisonment to which a prisoner has been sentenced as a reward for good conduct during his confinement, or credit for "good time," as it is sometimes called, is purely statutory,<sup>76</sup> and may be acquired only in the manner and under the circumstances pointed out by statute.<sup>77</sup> So, in the absence of statutory authority, the courts may not compel the granting of good time credits to a prisoner.<sup>78</sup>

Although it has been stated generally that a statute providing for an allowance of good time to prisoners who faithfully perform the duties assigned to them does not form a part of the sentence,<sup>79</sup> ordinarily, the provisions of such a statute become an inherent part of the sentence and punishment assessed,<sup>80</sup> so that a prisoner within the purview of such a statute is entitled to his discharge at the expiration of the time for which his sentence runs, less the time for which he is entitled to credit as good time earned,<sup>81</sup> since the courts and the administrative bodies are bound by the terms of the statute.<sup>82</sup>

The general rules applicable to the construction of statutes apply to the construction of a statute authorizing good time credits,<sup>83</sup> and the intent of the legislature, as expressed in the language of the statute, should be adhered to.<sup>84</sup> A statute of this nature should be given effect according to the purpose for which it was enacted,<sup>85</sup> which is to encourage prison discipline,<sup>86</sup> to encourage prisoners to observe the rules of the prison and to work faithfully,<sup>87</sup> to act as an inducement for the good conduct of a prisoner for which reward may be given if earned by him,<sup>88</sup> or to improve the morale and well-being of each inmate in each institution.<sup>89</sup>

What persons are included within a statute authorizing the granting of good time credits to prisoners is determined by the intent of the legislature as gathered from the language of the statute,<sup>90</sup> and, under some statutes, the question depends on whether a prisoner is serving under an indeterminate or general sentence or under a determinate or definite sentence.<sup>91</sup>

Statute allowing industrial good time

(1) The purpose of the statute regarding allowance of industrial good time to a prisoner is merely to authorize an additional good time to prisoners engaged in industry or confined in industrial camps referred to in the statute.—Bragg v. Huff, C.C.A.Va., 118 F.2d 1006—Holland v. Hiatt, D.C.Pa., 50 F.Supp. 406.

(2) Under such a statute, attorney general may, in his discretion, allow a larger deduction from sentence to prisoners engaged in industry or confined in industrial camps than is allowed in ordinary cases.—Bragg v. Huff, C.C.A.Va., 118 F.2d 1006—Wald v. Hiatt, D.C.Pa., 56 F.Supp. 504.

(5) Prisoners in constructive custody of penitentiary but actually confined in federal prison.—Ex parte Baird, Tex.Cr., 228 S.W.2d 511.

Place of confinement of United States prisoners

(1) Under a statute so providing, there is a uniform system of commutation for good conduct for United States prisoners, no matter where they are confined.—U. S. v. Jackson, Wash., 143 F. 783, 75 C.C.A. 41—50 C.J. p 347 note 12.

(2) Such statute has been held applicable to all sentences imposed subsequent to its taking effect.—U. S. v. Jackson, supra—50 C.J. p 347 note 13.

(3) However, such statute has been held inapplicable to sentences imposed prior to that time, unless the commutation allowable thereon is less than that provided for by the act.—Woodward v. Bridges, D.C. Mass., 144 F. 156—50 C.J. p 347 note 14.

Utah.—Cardisco v. Davis, 64 P.2d 216, 91 Utah 323.

Word "determinate," as used in Good Time Law covering prisoners time allowances is determined by the intent of the legislature,<sup>92</sup> and whether or not a statute is operative in a particular case, in point of time, is a question of legislative intent.<sup>93</sup> Thus, the statute may be inapplicable to prisoners convicted before its enactment,<sup>94</sup> or to persons not confined in a penitentiary until after its effective date,<sup>95</sup> or the statute may be applicable to sentences imposed after its effective date irrespective of the date when the offense was committed,<sup>96</sup> or the statute may not only be effective as to persons brought to a prison camp after the date of the enactment but also as to persons brought to such a camp before its date.<sup>97</sup>

Whether there is a repeal of a statute providing for good time allowances by the enactment of a later statute on the same subject depends on the intent of the legislature.<sup>98</sup> So indeterminate sentence statutes may<sup>99</sup> or may not<sup>1</sup> operate as impliedly repealing existing commutation statutes. An escape statute passed after the enactment of a statute providing for deductions from sentences for good conduct has been construed as amending and modifying the latter.<sup>2</sup>

b. Validity and Constitutionality of Statutes

The validity and constitutionality of statutes authorizing commutation of prison sentences for good conduct have been upheld. While it has been held that statutes of this nature are not invalid in so far as they are made applicable to sentences in force at the time of their enactment, there is also authority to the contrary.

The validity and constitutionality of statutes authorizing commutation of prison sentences for good conduct have been upheld.<sup>3</sup> While it has been held that statutes of this nature are not invalid in so far as they are made applicable to sentences in force at the time of their enactment,<sup>4</sup> there is also authority to the contrary.<sup>5</sup> A statute conditioning the release of prisoners after the service of a maximum sentence, less deductions for good conduct,<sup>6</sup> and providing that prisoners so released shall be subject to the parole laws,<sup>7</sup> is constitutional. Moreover, such a statute is not invalid because it modifies the effect of statutes in force before its enactment.<sup>8</sup> A statute in existence at the time of the imposition of a sentence which deprives an insane prisoner of the right to deduction from his sentence for good time is not invalid.<sup>9</sup>

c. Nature of Right and Allowance

- (1) In general
- (2) Commuted and suspended sentences

(1) In General

Under some statutes the allowances to be made for the good behavior of a prisoner are regarded as a matter of right; under other statutes the credit to be allowed is not a matter of right, but one of grace, and is a matter which is discretionary with the designated officials, so that, in order to entitle a prisoner to credits for good behavior, there must be some affirmative action on the part of the prison board or other proper authority.

Under some statutes the allowances to be made for the good behavior of a prisoner are regarded confined for a determinate term, signifies a definite number of years fixed by the court and the maximum time under an indeterminate sentence may not be considered as a determinate sentence within the law.—Hinkle v. Dowd, 58 N.E.2d 342, 223 Ind. 91.

Under statute permitting extra allowance to trusty prisoners by prison authorities, for good time, determination by prison authorities that prisoner has earned the additional good time or credit on his sentence is a condition precedent to prisoner's right to benefit of such additional credit.—Ex parte Wier, 78 P.2d 1094, 102 Colo. 321.

Construction and effect of resolution

(1) A resolution of prison board to the effect that credits are allowed to all prisoners confined in state prison, except to those prisoners named whose credits are disallowed, allows time credit to prisoner whose name is not included in list of prisoners whose credits are disallowed, and such resolution supersedes former order of board disallowing all future credits.—In re Daniels, 300 P. 878, 114 Cal. 698—Ex parte Davis, 294 P. 408, 110 Cal.App. 616—Ex parte Solman, 291 P. 224, 107 Cal. #### Prisoner becoming of unsound mind

(1) Under some statutory provisions, a prisoner, who became of unsound mind before the expiration of his sentence and was transferred to the hospital for defective delinquents before his good time allowance had finally accrued or become vested, was not entitled to deduction from his sentence for good conduct.—Estabrook v. King, C.C.A.Mo., 119 F.2d 607.

(2) Where it was determined that prisoner was of unsound mind before expiration of his sentence, his case was taken out of operation of statute providing for deductions from sentences for good conduct and was governed by statute providing for transfer to hospital, until restored to sanity, or until maximum sentence is served; since conditions under which prisoner's right to have deductions made from sentence for good conduct might become absolute had not occurred before such determination, he was not deprived of any constitutional right by enforcement of statute providing for transfer to hospital until restored to sanity, or until maximum sentence expires.—Douglas v. King, C.C.A.Mo., 110 F.2d 911, 127 A.L.R. 1200.

draw,<sup>19</sup> and to which the legislature may attach such conditions as it will<sup>20</sup> or as it may consider most conducive to the accomplishment of the desired purpose.<sup>21</sup> In order to be allowed statutory good time, it has been held that a prisoner must earn it by his conduct, industry, and obedience,<sup>22</sup> and under particular statutory provisions, allowances for good time may depend on a prisoner's good conduct for the entire period of his imprisonment until such an allowance will end the imprisonment.<sup>23</sup> So, under some statutes, a prisoner's record must show that he has faithfully observed all rules<sup>24</sup> and laws<sup>25</sup> and that he has not been subject to punishment.<sup>26</sup>

On the other hand, even under statutes wherein the commutation of a sentence for good conduct is treated as a matter not of right but of privilege in the first instance, or as something which a prisoner must earn before it becomes a vested right, the allowance of good time becomes a matter of right when the prisoner has complied with all the statutory requirements, and it is mandatory with the warden or other prison official to reduce the sentence in the manner prescribed by statute.<sup>27</sup> Moreover, under such statutes, the legislature may not withdraw such right as to those prisoners in whom the privilege has ripened into a vested right,<sup>28</sup> and, also, such a prisoner may not be deprived of his right to an allowance by reason of a mistake of the court or the attorney general in designating the place of his confinement.<sup>29</sup> It has also been held that, while the court may commit a person to a workhouse, although his punishment is assessed by the jury at confinement to a penitentiary, such a commitment to a workhouse will not deprive him of good conduct allowances.<sup>30</sup>

(2) Commuted and Suspended Sentences

Ordinarily, a prisoner is entitled to a diminution of his sentence for good conduct in case of a commutation of his sentence; but this right depends on the terms of the commutation; and, where it is apparent that the authority granting the commutation intended that no allowance for good conduct should be made, such intention will be given effect.

Ordinarily a prisoner is entitled to a diminution of his sentence for good conduct in case of a commutation of his sentence, where the commutation is to such a term of imprisonment as makes a statute providing credits for good time applicable;<sup>31</sup> but this right depends on the terms of the commutation;<sup>32</sup> and, where it is apparent that the au-

Time spent in penitentiary or prison

(1) Under some statutory provisions good conduct deductions from prisoner's sentence may be granted only for time he was incarcerated in penitentiary or prison.

U.S.—Aderhold v. Ellis, C.C.A.Ga., 84 F.2d 543, certiorari denied Ellis v. Aderhold, 57 S.Ct. 123, 299 U.S. 587, 81 L.Ed. 435—U. S. ex rel. Capone v. Lloyd, D.C.Cal., 27 F.Supp. 265. N.Y.—O'Neil v. Thayer, 282 N.Y.S. 584, 245 App.Div. 349, affirmed 200 N.E. 299, 270 N.Y. 521. Tex.—Ex parte Neisler, 69 S.W.2d 422, 126 Tex.Cr. 26.

(2) So under such a statute prisoner is not entitled to statutory deduction from sentence for good conduct until he reaches penitentiary and is confined therein in execution of his sentence.—Swope v. Lawton, C.C.A.Wash., 83 F.2d 814.

(3) Also, these deductions may not be granted, under such a statute, for time spent by prisoner while he was incarcerated in county jail pending appeal from judgment sentencing him to penitentiary, notwithstanding order of district court that sentence should date from time when defendant was first committed to county jail.—Aderhold v. Ellis, C.C.A.Ga., 84 F.2d 543, certiorari denied Ellis v. Aderhold, 57 S.Ct. 123, 299 U.S. 587, 81 L.Ed. 433.

Where the statute is capable of two constructions, that construction should be adopted which would entitle the prisoner to his discharge at the earliest time.<sup>52</sup>

The operation and effect of an enactment making changes with respect to the computation of good time deductions depend on the intent of the legislature as gathered from the language used.<sup>53</sup> So, by virtue of provisions to that effect, a statutory amendment may not apply to one who has committed a crime prior to such amendment, or to one who was received in prison prior to a specified date, and the law in existence prior to the amendment may continue to apply as to such persons;<sup>54</sup> and, where the amendment so provides, a prisoner's time credits should be calculated under the statute as amended since he entered prison.<sup>55</sup>

A statute relative to the computation of good time allowances expressly providing that any rights or liabilities in existence at the time of its enactment shall not be affected thereby does not operate retroactively,<sup>56</sup> and, where such a statute directs that good conduct time be credited as earned and computed monthly, it is prospective only and does not affect a case within the provisions of an earlier statute.<sup>57</sup> Under a statute providing that a prisoner may earn allowances for good conduct from the time of its taking effect, a prisoner is entitled to credits only for good conduct earned after the statute took effect.<sup>58</sup>

Under some statutes, a prisoner is entitled to credit for good behavior as and when he earns it,<sup>59</sup> and, where the statute so provides, good behavior time should be credited at the end of each year as it is earned.<sup>60</sup> Under statutes whereby the credits are to be allowed on a yearly basis, they should be made during the year in which they are earned,<sup>61</sup> or should be computed on the whole term and accordingly deducted therefrom.<sup>62</sup> Where the statute allows a specified credit for good behavior for each full or calendar month's service, the credits should be computed on the number of months' actual imprisonment with the requisite behavior.<sup>63</sup> Under some statutory provisions, a prisoner's good time credit is allowed at the end of his term of imprisonment, when and if its allowance, together with the time served, will entitle him to his discharge, the sentence thus having been served in full.<sup>64</sup>

The credits allowed for good behavior and those allowed for time spent outside the prison walls by a prisoner as trustee are cumulative and not concurrent under some statutes,<sup>65</sup> and the credits for good behavior should be used finally when such credits, together with the credit earned as trusty, added to the time already served, equal the maximum sentence,<sup>66</sup> but the credit allowed for good behavior is based on the time actually served and not on the extra time allowed for time spent by the prisoner as a trusty.<sup>67</sup> A prisoner has been conduct.—McKinney v. Clemmer, supra.

(3) Where relator had been sentenced to imprisonment for certain period and thereafter an order was entered vacating sentence previously imposed and sentencing relator to imprisonment for another period, the term to "commence as of today," a credit on original sentence for good conduct could not be applied to the new sentence in reduction of it.—*U. #### Discharge not warranted

A prisoner was not entitled to his discharge where extra time earned by him under statute providing that each day spent by prisoners while held not entitled to a good time credit for the time he was at liberty under an erroneous discharge on a writ of habeas corpus procured by him,<sup>68</sup> and, under some statutory provisions, a prisoner conditionally released after serving the maximum sentence, less good conduct allowances, and thereafter returned to custody for violating the conditions of his release, has been required to serve the remainder of the original sentence without deducting the time he was out on release.<sup>69</sup>

Under indeterminate sentence. In the absence of a statute otherwise providing, where a prisoner is serving under an indeterminate sentence, the rule is that the allowance for good time must be deducted from the maximum time fixed,<sup>70</sup> and not from the minimum time.<sup>71</sup> However, it has also been held that compensation for good behavior should be deducted from the minimum rather than the maximum sentence,<sup>72</sup> and that, where an indeterminate sentence is valid only for the minimum term, the allowance should be computed for that term.<sup>73</sup>

Commuted sentence. Where a life sentence is commuted to one for a term of years, the diminution of the sentence for good conduct commences on the date of the prisoner's arrival in prison, according to one view,<sup>74</sup> but according to another view, only from the date of the commutation.<sup>75</sup>

(2) Under Cumulative and Concurrent Sentences

Where a prisoner is serving under two or more sentences which do not run concurrently, the question whether the allowance for good time should be computed separately on each term, or should be made as if the several sentences were for a single, continuous term of confinement consisting of an aggregate of such sentences, depends on statutory provisions; under some statutory provisions, where a prisoner is serving under two or more sentences concurrently, such sentences may not be aggregated for the purpose of computing the amount of good time allowance.

Under some statutes, where a prisoner is serving under two or more sentences which do not run concurrently, the allowance for good time should be computed separately on each term.<sup>76</sup> However, under other statutes the allowance for good time should be computed as if the several sentences were for a single, continuous term of confinement consisting of an aggregate of such sentences, rather than a series of distinct and independent terms,<sup>77</sup> and, under some statutory provisions, where sentence is imposed at one time for two or more separate offenses and a maximum and minimum period of confinement are fixed on the first sentence and only a maximum on the others, the terms of imprisonment are to be regarded as one continuous term in determining the diminution of sentence by good conduct earned.<sup>78</sup>

A statute providing that the aggregate of a prisoner's several sentences shall be the basis on which his good time credit shall be computed has been held applicable only to cases where sentences are being served while a prisoner is being confined in a penitentiary.<sup>79</sup> Moreover, such a statute has working as trustees outside the prison walls should be counted as two days in computing time on their sentences, plus the good conduct time earned by him under statute authorizing deduction from sentence for good behavior, added to actual time of incarceration, did not amount to his maximum sentence.—*Beatty v. ### Invalid rule

A rule entitled "Record Clerk's Manual of the Bureau of Prisons of the Department of Justice" was without legal authority in computing deductions to be made from a prisoner's sentence, where it was contrary to the clear language of the statute providing that, when a prisoner has two or more sentences, the aggregate thereof shall be the basis of his deductions.—*Sweetney v. Statute held inapplicable to sen-

been held to refer to sentences which are in existence at the same time,<sup>80</sup> and not to a case where a sentence is imposed on one who makes an escape from a sentence which he is already serving,<sup>81</sup> in which event deductions may be calculated at the rate applicable to the sentence imposed for escape and not on the aggregate of the sentence being served and the sentence for escape.<sup>82</sup> Under such a statute, the deductions to which a prisoner may be entitled are based on the maximum period of confinement under the sentences which he is serving.<sup>83</sup> It has also been held that, where a prisoner, in addition to his original sentence, is sentenced for escape, the maximum release date is at the expiration of the total of the two sentences.<sup>84</sup>

Under concurrent sentences. Under some statutory provisions only consecutive sentences may be aggregated for the purpose of determining the amount of good time allowance, and, where a prisoner is serving two or more sentences concurrently, such sentences may not be aggregated for such purpose.<sup>85</sup> Moreover, under some statutes, where a prisoner is serving two or more sentences concurrently, he is not entitled to have the allowance for good conduct calculated as on each of the sentences, and have the total thus obtained deducted from the longest sentence.<sup>86</sup>

f. Effect of Subsequent Conviction

By virtue of statute, prisoners who have served previous terms may not be allowed good time, or may be allowed less good time than prisoners serving a first term, and prisoners who have had the benefit of a good-conduct allowance may be required to serve out such time on a subsequent conviction.

The legislative policy has been to give the state board of control of institutions and agencies wide latitude in administering penal institutions, without laying down hard-and-fast rules of procedure as to com-

Under some statutory provisions, prisoners who have served previous terms are not allowed good time.<sup>87</sup> Under such a statute, no hard-and-fast rules need be followed in ascertaining whether a prisoner is a multiple offender,<sup>88</sup> and a refusal to allow a prisoner an opportunity to be heard as to former offenses is not a violation of his constitutional rights.<sup>89</sup> Moreover, under such a statute, a multiple offender is not entitled to a commutation of sentence for good behavior on the ground that his previous convictions were not alleged in the indictment or proved on the trial.<sup>90</sup> Under other statutes prisoners who have served previous terms are allowed less good time than prisoners serving a first term.<sup>91</sup>

Prisoners who have had the benefit of a good-conduct allowance, may, by virtue of statute, be required to serve out such time on a subsequent conviction,<sup>92</sup> or on a conviction for felony before the expiration of the period within which they were originally sentenced,<sup>93</sup> in which case the time so required to be served does not run concurrently with that to be served under the second conviction.<sup>94</sup> Under some statutes good-conduct allowances depend on the aggregate of the sentences in existence when such allowances are earned and may not be affected retroactively by a sentence subsequently imposed,<sup>95</sup> and even though there is continuous custody of the prisoner a subsequent imprisonment under a later sentence has its own separate basis for good-time computation.<sup>96</sup>

A prisoner entitled to his discharge by reason of having served his term of imprisonment, less the time which he has earned by good behavior, may secure it in a legal proceeding,<sup>97</sup> as in a case where no forfeiture of good-time credit has been declared until the prisoner has served for such length of time that, with the diminution of sentence provided for, he is entitled to his discharge,<sup>98</sup> but he must make a proper showing that he is entitled to the relief asked for.<sup>99</sup>

h. Forfeiture of Right

(1) In general

(2) Proceedings; hearing and notice

(1) In General

The misconduct of a prisoner may result in the forfeiture, in whole or in part, of his right to a reduction of sentence for good conduct.

The misconduct of a prisoner may result in the forfeiture, in whole or in part, of his right to a reduction of sentence for good conduct;<sup>1</sup> and this forfeiture may be regulated by statute.<sup>2</sup> A statute revising earlier statutes relative to the forfeiture of good-time allowance and expressly providing that any rights or liabilities in existence at the time of its enactment shall not be affected thereby does not operate retroactively.<sup>3</sup> Thus the enactment of such a revisory statute does not modify a prior forfeiture of a prisoner's entire good-time credit for misconduct,<sup>4</sup> so that where, under the earlier statutory provisions, a prisoner's entire good-time credit might be forfeited by reason of his misconduct, subject only to the right of the attorney general to restore all or any part of it,<sup>5</sup> a prisoner's misconduct prior to the date of the revision works a forfeiture of all good-time credit earnable by him up to the date of the revision, subject only to the right of the attorney general to restore such credit.<sup>6</sup>

Statutory provisions control as to the official who has the authority to forfeit a prisoner's good-time allowance,<sup>7</sup> and, under some statutory provisions, whether or not there shall be a forfeiture of a

Prisoner as ward of court

All possible deduction for good time accredited to a prisoner serving consecutive sentences is destroyed by bad conduct even though such conduct occurs after one or more of the successive sentences has been served, and a prisoner serving consecutive sentences remained a ward of the court when he was conditionally released after serving his sentences less good-time deduction, and, when he breached terms of his conditional release, he was subject to return to penitentiary to serve full remaining portion of term of his sentences without credit for allowance of any good time, notwithstanding breach occurred after first sentence had been served.—Grant v. Hunter, C.C.A.Kan., 166 F.2d 673.

Escaped prisoner

Where accused was imprisoned in penitentiary under two consecutive sentences, and escaped while serving the first sentence, accused forfeited not only the allowance for good behavior to which he was entitled when he escaped, but all credits for good behavior during first term.—Gray v. Swope, D.C.Wash., 28 F.Supp. 822.

7. U.S.—Pagliaro v. Cox, C.C.A.Mo., 143 F.2d 900.

Warden of federal penitentiary could forfeit prisoner's good-time allowance on ground of escape effected before prisoner's delivery to the penitentiary, but after delivery to United States Marshal, and where prisoner escaped while en route to prisoner's good time is a matter within the discretion of the designated authorities,<sup>8</sup> and the decision of an authorized board in this respect ordinarily should not be interfered with<sup>9</sup> unless it clearly appears that such board exceeded its powers<sup>10</sup> or that substantial injustice has been done,<sup>11</sup> although, in declaring a forfeiture, an official may not act in an arbitrary manner.<sup>12</sup>

Under some statutory provisions a good-time allowance may be forfeited and taken away from a prisoner for good cause,<sup>13</sup> as where he fails faithfully to observe the rules within the meaning of the statute,<sup>14</sup> or in the event of an escape,<sup>15</sup> although, under some statutes forfeiture of good time in the event of an escape is not mandatory.<sup>16</sup>

As misconduct or breach of law

(1) Prisoner who escapes from prison and thereafter makes another attempt to escape demeans himself improperly as well as violates a statute, and commissioner is authorized to deduct from prisoner's good-time allowance for such misconduct notwithstanding no criminal prosecution is instituted against the prisoner.—State ex rel. Turner v. Gore, 175 S.W.2d 317, 180 Tenn. 333.

Refusal to allow prisoner time

ance for good conduct are controlled by statute, and an administrative authority, in declaring a forfeiture of time credits, ordinarily is not required to adhere to formal procedure; the proceedings may be summary in character but a hearing and notice may be required.

Proceedings for the forfeiture of a prisoner's allowance for good conduct are controlled by statute.<sup>17</sup> Ordinarily an administrative authority, in declaring a forfeiture of time credits, is not required to adhere to formal procedure,<sup>18</sup> or to comply with rules of evidence as in a criminal prosecution before a judicial tribunal,<sup>19</sup> since the proceedings are administrative in nature.<sup>20</sup> So, under a statute authorizing a designated board to forfeit a prisoner's good-behavior allowance for misbehavior after proof of the offense and notice to the prisoner, the proceeding may be summary in character,<sup>21</sup> although a hearing<sup>22</sup> and notice<sup>23</sup> are es-credits, by adult authority, for current period is not the equivalent of a declaration of a forfeiture of time credits previously allowed which would require notice, hearing, proof, and a finding that prisoner was guilty of misconduct.—Ex parte Smith, 205 P.2d 662, 33 Cal.2d 797.

18. Tenn.—State ex rel. Turner v. Gore, 175 S.W.2d 317, 180 Tenn. 333.

Reason for rule

Although forfeiture of prisoner's right to diminution of indeterminate sentence for good behavior may flow from conduct involving a criminal offense, the prisoner is neither tried nor sentenced for violation of a criminal law, and his punishment consists solely in serving of balance of his sentence originally imposed.—People ex rel. Day v. Lewis, 34 N.E. 2d 712, 376 Ill. 509.

19. Tenn.—State ex rel. Turner v. Gore, 175 S.W.2d 317, 180 Tenn. 333.

Fact that jury acquitted prisoner of charge did not preclude department of public welfare from determining that fight involved an infraction of a prison rule, and, being prisoner's fifth violation, forfeited his earned good time, especially in view of different degree of proof required.—*People ex rel. sential; and such a statute is sufficiently complied with where a prisoner is brought before the board and, on the charge being read and explained to him, he pleads guilty.<sup>24</sup> It has been held that a deprivation of commutation-time credits on the basis of an administrative classification of a prisoner as a multiple offender is illegal in that it deprives him of his fundamental right to be heard on notice as to his liability to lose commutation time otherwise earned.<sup>25</sup>

Under statutes requiring prisoners to be informed from time to time as to their records as to loss of good time and the reason therefor, and requiring a designated board regularly to pass on reports of infractions of rules, a prisoner should be given, if he so desires, an opportunity to be heard on such reports.<sup>26</sup> It has been held immaterial that an order forfeiting good behavior credits is made at a time subsequent to the expiration of an alleged reduced term where the order is based on an infraction of the rules prior to the expiration of the sentence.<sup>27</sup>

1. Restoration of Forfeited Credits

Under some statutes a designated board or official has the power to restore good-time credits forfeited by reason of the misconduct of a prisoner, for such reasons as to it or him may seem proper; but, under a statute so providing, there may not be a restoration of good-time credit to a prisoner who forfeited it by reason of an escape and was thereafter convicted of the independent offense of escape.

Under some statutes a designated board or official ordinarily has the power to restore good-time credits forfeited by reason of the misconduct of a prisoner, for such reasons as to it or him may seem proper,<sup>28</sup> and, in the absence of an abuse of discretion, the action of a board in restoring such credits may not be interfered with.<sup>29</sup> However, under a statute so providing, there may not be a restoration of good-time credit to a prisoner who forfeited it by reason of an escape and was thereafter convicted of the independent offense of escape.<sup>30</sup>

§ 22. Bringing Articles to, or Communicating with, Prisoners as an Offense

By statute, or rules adopted pursuant thereto, it is sometimes made an offense to bring specified articles to prisoners or to communicate with them.

By statute, or rules adopted pursuant thereto, it is sometimes made an offense to bring specified articles to prisoners or to communicate with them.<sup>31</sup> The rules applicable to prosecutions for criminal offenses generally are applicable to prosecutions for such an offense,<sup>32</sup> as, for example, with respect to matters relative to the indictment, information, or complaint,<sup>33</sup> as well as to the trial.<sup>34</sup>

As not of grace

Where prisoner had forfeited his good-conduct time allowance prior to effective date of revisory statute relative to good-time allowances, subsequent modification of previous forfeiture by restoring to him such of his forfeited good time as was earnable after the critical date was an act of grace, and not of right, to prisoner and apparently an exercise by attorney general of his power to restore good time forfeited.—McKinney v. p. Damages

q. Trial; judgment and enforcement thereof

a. Necessity of Legal Taking

Before a prisoner can make an escape on which civil liability may be predicated he must have been legally taken into custody, and this requires that the proceedings by which the prisoner was taken must have been valid and sufficient.

Before a prisoner can make an escape on which civil liability may be predicated he must have been legally taken into custody, and this requires that the proceedings, such as the judgment, arrest, and commitment, by which the prisoner was taken, must have been valid and sufficient.<sup>35</sup> If the court rendering judgment against a prisoner had no jurisdiction, the sheriff is not liable for an escape;<sup>36</sup> but if the judgment is not void the fact that it may have been erroneous is immaterial since a judgment may not be attacked collaterally.<sup>37</sup> So whenever the process by which one is arrested is void,<sup>38</sup> or appears to be void,<sup>39</sup> no action lies for his escape; but advantage may not be taken of a mere error or irregularity in the process.<sup>40</sup> An action may be maintained for an escape of a prisoner held on mesne process.<sup>41</sup> If a creditor gives a debtor in execution permission to go at large beyond the jail liberties, an action for escape may not be maintained.<sup>42</sup>

b. Kinds of Escape

There are, at common law, two kinds of escape, the one, willful and voluntary, the other, negligent; a third kind of escape, due to act of God or the public enemies, is also recognized in the cases.

There are, at common law, two kinds of escape, the one, willful or voluntary,<sup>43</sup> the other, negligent.<sup>44</sup> A third kind of escape, due to act of God or the public enemies, is also recognized in the cases.<sup>45</sup>

A voluntary escape occurs when a prisoner is allowed to go at large by permission or willful default of the officer in whose custody he is.<sup>46</sup> In this type of escape it is of no consequence that the sheriff relied on the prisoner's honor and promise to return<sup>47</sup> or that the prisoner was a trusty;<sup>48</sup> and any going out of prison with the knowledge or consent of the sheriff or keeper may constitute a voluntary escape.<sup>49</sup>

There is a negligent escape when a prisoner has gone out of sight and control of the officer in whose custody he was, without the knowledge or consent of such officer, but by reason of his careless or negligent conduct.<sup>50</sup> An escape of this nature necessarily implies some neglect of duty or default in the officer.<sup>51</sup>

c. Acts Constituting Escape Generally

An escape occurs when acts are done which are incompatible with custody, or when a relaxation of confinement is permitted so that a prisoner is not at all times in control of the sheriff or keeper, although there are some emergencies which have been declared a sufficient excuse for a prisoner's temporary liberty.

An escape occurs when acts are done which are incompatible with custody, or when a relaxation of confinement is permitted so that a prisoner is not at all times in the control of the sheriff or keeper.<sup>52</sup> So, where the sheriff places a prisoner in a hospital in charge of persons who are not the sheriff's deputies there is an escape.<sup>53</sup> However, although a sheriff may not, as an indulgence

Where a prisoner arrested by a deputy sheriff and placed in the county jail was released by the sheriff, there was a voluntary escape, since a voluntary escape takes place when the prisoner is voluntarily given any liberty not authorized by law.—Hefner v. Hunt, 112 A. 675, 120 Me. 10.

or privilege, allow a prisoner to go outside the jail,<sup>54</sup> there are some emergencies which have been declared a sufficient excuse for a prisoner's temporary liberty.<sup>55</sup>

d. Admitting Prisoners to Jail Liberties

A departure from the confines of the jail by a prisoner entitled to jail liberties is not an escape for which the sheriff or keeper may be held liable as long as the prisoner keeps within the liberties, but to admit a prisoner to the liberties, except in the cases provided by law, renders a jailer liable for an escape; a sheriff may be liable for an escape if he admits his prisoner to the liberty of the yard on a bond which is not in conformity with statute.

The departure from the confines of the jail by a prisoner entitled to jail liberties is not an escape for which the sheriff or keeper may be held liable as long as the prisoner keeps within the liberties,<sup>56</sup> but to admit a prisoner to the liberties, except in the cases provided by law, renders a jailer liable for an escape.<sup>57</sup> With respect to his liability for an escape, a jailer is not bound to allow a prisoner the privilege of the prison liberties, unless the prisoner gives bond and security not to depart therefrom,<sup>58</sup> and while it has been held that, since the bond is intended as a security to the jailer against the abuse of the privilege by the prisoner, he may waive such security, and grant the liberties without a bond,<sup>59</sup> it has also been held that a sheriff is liable for an escape if he admits a prisoner to the liberties without giving a bond.<sup>60</sup> It is a common condition of a prison limits bond that the prisoner, if not legally discharged within a certain time from the day of his commitment, shall surrender himself to be held in close confinement, so that where he remains outside the prison walls an escape occurs.<sup>61</sup>

On irregular or insufficient bond. A sheriff is liable for an escape if he admits his prisoner to the liberty of the yard on a bond which is not in conformity with statute<sup>62</sup> unless the creditor has waived the irregularity and accepted the bond.<sup>63</sup>

On the other hand, if the bail is sufficient when given, the fact that it afterward fails will not render the sheriff liable.<sup>64</sup>

e. Going beyond Jail Liberties

Ordinarily, where a prisoner goes or is at large beyond the liberties of the jail, without the assent of the person at whose instance he is in custody, it is an escape for which the officer in charge may be held liable.

Ordinarily, where a prisoner goes or is at large beyond the liberties of the jail, without the assent of the person at whose instance he is in custody, it is an escape for which the officer in charge may be held liable.<sup>65</sup> In some instances a distinction has been drawn between a case in which a prisoner voluntarily goes beyond the jail liberties and one in which he does so involuntarily, and it has been held that, where a prisoner admitted to the liberties of the jail knowingly and voluntarily goes beyond the limits, it is an escape for which the sheriff may be held liable,<sup>66</sup> but that where a prisoner goes beyond the jail liberties involuntarily, as by accidentally or inadvertently going beyond the liberties which are bounded by an imaginary line, and returning immediately before action brought, the sheriff may not be held liable.<sup>67</sup> With respect to whether or not there has been an escape on which liability may be predicated, a bond for the liberties restrains the prisoner within the liberties established by law for the time being;<sup>68</sup> and this contemplates the right of the legislature to alter the prison limits, and such alteration does not impair the obligation of a bond previously given.<sup>69</sup>

f. Removal by Legal Process

The removal of a prisoner from the prison or the jail liberties by virtue of a valid legal process which affords justification to the officer taking him is not an escape on which liability may be predicated.

cated.<sup>70</sup> Thus it is not an escape to take a prisoner who is imprisoned on execution in a civil suit away from the jail liberties on a habeas corpus.<sup>71</sup> However, where a sheriff suffers his prisoner to get out of his custody, except in obedience to the requirements of the writ, or goes with him out of the way, for the accommodation of the prisoner, it will constitute an escape.<sup>72</sup>

g. Discharge of Prisoner

- (1) In general
- (2) By order of court

(1) In General

Where a sheriff discharges a prisoner of his own will, such a discharge constitutes an escape for which the sheriff may be held liable; but he is relieved from liability where he discharges a prisoner with the consent of the creditor, or where the discharge is made by act of the legislature, or under circumstances authorized by statute.

Since a sheriff has no power to discharge a debtor from prison of his own will, such a discharge is an escape for which he may be held liable.<sup>73</sup> In order to relieve a sheriff from liability the discharge must be made either with the consent of the creditor,<sup>74</sup> by valid order of court, as discussed infra subdivision g (2) this section, by act of the legislature,<sup>75</sup> or under circumstances authorized by statute.<sup>76</sup> Where a prisoner, who is confined under execution on a debt provable in bankruptcy, procures a discharge in bankruptcy and goes beyond the jail liberties the sheriff is not liable as for an escape.<sup>77</sup>

Under some statutory provisions a sheriff who releases a prisoner before his discharge in due course of law is liable to the person aggrieved for such wrongful release.<sup>78</sup>

(2) By Order of Court

In an action against a sheriff for an escape it is a defense for him that a valid order for the discharge of the prisoner has been made, although it has never been formally served on him.

In an action against a sheriff for an escape it is a defense for him that a valid order for the discharge of the prisoner has been made,<sup>79</sup> although it has never been formally served on him.<sup>80</sup> If the court making the order had jurisdiction, the sheriff is justified in obeying it, although it may have been for an insufficient cause, or founded on an irregular proceeding.<sup>81</sup> However, if the court did not have jurisdiction, the order of discharge is void, and the sheriff is liable for his act in discharging the prisoner.<sup>82</sup> Hence, in order to protect the sheriff, either the order of discharge must show the facts giving the court jurisdiction<sup>83</sup> or it must be made to appear by proof aliunde that the court had jurisdiction to make the order.<sup>84</sup>

Under a statute making a sheriff liable to the person aggrieved for releasing a prisoner before his discharge in due course of law, a wrong done in releasing a prisoner may be cured by a nunc pro tunc order of the court releasing the prisoner as of the date of the discharge.<sup>85</sup>

h. Constructive Escape

Where a prisoner is allowed any liberty or authority incompatible with the notion of custody, not merely salva et arcta custodia, but of any custody at all, it is deemed an escape on which liability may be based.

Release on order of official referee

Any wrong in release of prisoner on order of official referee was cured by court's order confirming referee's report and releasing prisoner nunc pro tunc as of date of discharge, with respect to sheriff's liability for wrongful discharge of prisoner, and prisoner was discharged by due course of law within statute.—Rosenblum v. Higgins, supra.

bility may be based,<sup>86</sup> since the whole doctrine of escapes rests on the notion that there should be an incarceration of the prisoner within the proper limits,<sup>87</sup> and the fact that a person is at liberty to go where he pleases without any restraint, acting or ready to act on him, either physically or morally, excludes the notion of imprisonment.<sup>88</sup>

At common law, if a sheriff is arrested and committed to the county jail, it is an escape, for he cannot be imprisoned in a jail of which he has the custody.<sup>89</sup> On the same principle, if a jailer is committed to his own jail and no new keeper is appointed, it is an escape of the jailer for which the sheriff is liable;<sup>90</sup> but it is not an escape of the other prisoners, if they are in fact kept in custody.<sup>91</sup> So it has been asserted to be an escape, if the sheriff makes a prisoner of the jailer, and gives him the keys.<sup>92</sup> Also, if a sheriff intrusts a prisoner with the keys to the prison, it is an escape, since no man can be his own jailer.<sup>93</sup> However, the correctness of the doctrine of constructive escape has been denied, as being inapplicable to cases arising under a statute giving prisoners the benefit of the prison bounds.<sup>94</sup>

1. Liability of Sheriff or Jailer to Creditor or Other Person

- (1) In general
- (2) After taking bond for liberties
- (3) Liability as between incumbent and predecessor
- (4) Liability on bond

(1) In General

It is the keeper of a jail who is liable for an escape, and where a sheriff is held liable he is held qua jailer and not qua sheriff, so that where a sheriff is not the keeper or jailer, and has no control over the jail, he is not liable for an escape.

It is the keeper of a jail who is liable for an escape.<sup>95</sup> Where a sheriff is held liable he is held qua jailer and not qua sheriff.<sup>96</sup> Therefore, where a sheriff is not the keeper or jailer, and has no control over the jail, he is not liable for an escape.<sup>97</sup> It has been held that a sheriff is not liable for the negligent escape of a debtor committed from another county.<sup>98</sup> The responsibilities of a sheriff are the same after a prisoner has been committed, whether he was arrested under federal or state process.<sup>99</sup>

For injuries to third person. Both the sheriff<sup>1</sup> and his jailer<sup>2</sup> may be held liable for injuries done to a third person by a prisoner in the course of an escape, where the sheriff is charged with, and has under his control, the management and direction of the jail.

(2) After Taking Bond for Liberties

A bond given to entitle a prisoner to the liberties of the prison yard, if regularly taken and allowed, discharges the sheriff from any further responsibility for the prisoner's remaining in his custody.

A bond given to entitle a prisoner to the liberties of the prison yard is in effect a substitute for the custody of the sheriff, and, if regularly taken and allowed, it discharges the sheriff from any further responsibility for the prisoner's remaining in his custody.<sup>3</sup> Such a bond is assignable;<sup>4</sup> and if the sheriff refuse to assign it to the creditor, on request, after breach of condition, an action on the case will lie against him.<sup>5</sup>

(3) Liability as between Incumbent and Predecessor

With respect to his liability for an escape, a sheriff who receives a public jail from his predecessor, although without a deed of assignment, is responsible from that period for the safe-keeping of prisoners there, as though they had been originally committed to his custody.

With respect to his liability for an escape, a sheriff who receives a public jail from his predecessor, although without a deed of assignment, is responsible from that period for the safe-keeping of prisoners there, as though they had been originally committed to his custody.<sup>6</sup> If a new sheriff receives a prisoner from his predecessor he is answerable for his escape, although a voluntary escape may have existed in the time of his predecessor.<sup>7</sup> Where a prisoner, who had given bond for jail liberties, was not assigned to the new sheriff on his taking charge of the jail, the latter is not liable for an escape thereafter occurring.<sup>8</sup>

An outgoing sheriff is not liable as for an escape for failure to deliver a prisoner to his successor, where the prisoner remains within the jail limits,<sup>9</sup> but he is liable in case of the prisoner's actual escape.<sup>10</sup>

(4) Liability on Bond

Suffering a prisoner to escape is a breach of the condition of a sheriff's bond, and the sureties are liable without first fixing the liability of the principal.

Suffering a prisoner to escape is a breach of the condition of a sheriff's bond,<sup>11</sup> and the sureties are liable without first fixing the liability of the principal.<sup>12</sup> Illegally allowing the liberty of the jail yard to a prisoner also constitutes a breach of the jail keeper's bond given for the faithful execution of his office according to law.<sup>13</sup>

j. Other Liabilities

A sheriff may take a bond from the jailer to indemnify him for all losses to which he may be subjected by the escape of a prisoner, while in the custody of the jailer; but without a bond of indemnity the jailer is liable to the sheriff only for want of fidelity or due care in the discharge of his duty.

A sheriff has a right to take a bond from the jailer to indemnify him for all losses to which he may be subjected by the escape of a prisoner, while in the custody of the jailer;<sup>14</sup> but without a bond of indemnity the jailer is liable to the sheriff only for want of fidelity or due care in the discharge of his duty.<sup>15</sup>

Liability of prisoner to state. The state has been held not entitled to recover in tort from an escaped prisoner the expenses of his recapture and return to prison.<sup>16</sup>

k. Defenses Generally

In actions for escape the courts have passed on whether or not particular defenses are available to the defendant.

In actions for escape, among other defenses held to be good,<sup>17</sup> it has been held that it is a good defense to set up that defendant acted under an order of the court enlarging the limits, and that the prisoner was within those limits,<sup>18</sup> that one of two joint debtors was released because the other was discharged by the execution plaintiff,<sup>19</sup> that plaintiff furnished the prisoner with the means of escape,<sup>20</sup> or that the escape was procured by fraud.<sup>21</sup>

Ordinarily a sheriff is not to be held conclusively liable as for an escape on proof that he had taken or allowed the debtor to be out of jail, but he may show the circumstances which induced him so to act, and from such circumstances it may be determined whether the absence of the prisoner from the jail was but temporary and for justifiable and good cause, or was a mere indulgence or privilege granted the prisoner.<sup>22</sup> However, under some of the earlier authorities, nothing but an act of God or the public enemy will relieve a sheriff from liability for the escape from jail of an execution debtor.<sup>23</sup> With respect to the early authorities taking the latter view it has been stated that, under the new and enlightened systems prevailing at the present day, most of the law as set forth therein is practically obsolete.<sup>24</sup>

Reason for rule

A crime against the sovereignty of the state violates none of its property rights, and no governmental expenditure paid out for apprehending a criminal or maintaining or recovering his custody incident to punishment can be construed into a tortious invasion of state's property rights, since expenditure is voluntarily made by the state for the protection of the people of the state at large in preserving the integrity of the penal system.—State Highway and Public Works Commission v. Cobb, supra.

jail, where they acted on justice's certificate showing that he had discharged the debtor, and it was not clear from certificate that proper service was not had on judgment creditor.—Aetna Ins. Co. v. Blumenthal, supra.

On the other hand, among other defenses held not to be good,<sup>25</sup> it has been held that it is not a good defense to an action for escape to set up that no prison fees were paid, even where it appeared that the prisoner was not able to pay such fees,<sup>26</sup> that the liberties were undefined by visible boundaries and monuments,<sup>27</sup> that the prisoner had license to go at large from plaintiff<sup>28</sup> or his attorney,<sup>29</sup> or that the prisoner forcibly broke jail.<sup>30</sup> It has also been held not a good defense to set up that a satisfaction piece turned out to be a forgery,<sup>31</sup> that the pleadings were amended to enhance damages,<sup>32</sup> that plaintiff declared generally as in custody instead of declaring specially that he was in close custody,<sup>33</sup> that the order for bail was rescinded after it had been delivered to the sheriff and executed by him,<sup>34</sup> that after being apprised of the escape plaintiff delayed unreasonably to call for an assignment of the bond,<sup>35</sup> or that the prisoner was by law privileged from arrest.<sup>36</sup>

Insolvency of prisoner. The insolvency of the prisoner is no defense to an action in debt, or in the nature of one, against a sheriff for an escape.<sup>37</sup> However, the rule is otherwise where the action is on the case.<sup>38</sup>

Defects in jail. While it has been held that no action will lie against a prison keeper for the escape of a prisoner through the insufficiency of the jail and without negligence on the keeper's part,<sup>39</sup> the general rule is that a defect in the jail will not constitute a good defense,<sup>40</sup> and the sheriff has been held for an escape, although there was no jail at all in the county.<sup>41</sup>

1. Recapture or Return of Prisoner

- (1) In general
- (2) When escape voluntary
- (3) When escape negligent

(1) In General

In the absence of a statute otherwise providing, an officer may be held liable for an escape of a prisoner in his custody on final process even though he recaptures him; but the rule may be otherwise with respect to a prisoner in his custody on mesne process.

At common law it has been held that when a sheriff suffers a prisoner in his custody on mesne process to go at large without sureties, he may retake him at any time before return of the writ, and if he has the body in court on the return of the writ it is a good defense to an action for an escape.<sup>42</sup> However, it has also been held that where a debtor, arrested on mesne process, escapes after judgment, his return before the issue of execution is no defense.<sup>43</sup>

Although under some statutory provisions the rule is otherwise,<sup>44</sup> an officer who suffers a debtor to escape after an arrest on a capias ad satisfaciendum has been held liable for such escape even though he has the prisoner in court on the return day,<sup>45</sup> and an officer may be held liable for an escape even though he retakes and commits the debtor within the life of the execution.<sup>46</sup>

In criminal cases, or in cases somewhat penal in character and procedure, there is no distinction between escape from mesne and final process, and the sheriff is answerable to the state, and the rights of the people demand a recapture.<sup>47</sup>

An officer who has suffered an escape of a debtor in his custody on mesne process is not liable in an action for the escape, if he retakes the debtor on fresh pursuit, and the debtor then forcibly rescues himself, on is forcibly rescued by others, from his custody.—Whithead v. Keyes, 1 Allen, Mass., 350—50 C.J. p 355 note 96.

50 C.J. p 356 note 1.

Under statutes granting liberties on bond. Since the statutes relative to jail liberties have not altered the common law as to the liability of sheriffs for escapes or taken away their common-law rights as to fresh pursuit and recapture, if a prisoner, who has given to the sheriff a bond for the liberties, voluntarily goes beyond the limits, his bond is forfeited and the sheriff may retake him on fresh pursuit, and recommit him to custody, or bring an action on the bond.<sup>48</sup>

(2) When Escape Voluntary

Generally, after a voluntary escape from custody and final process, the sheriff may not retake the prisoner and receive him back without the plaintiff's consent.

The general rule is that, after a voluntary escape from custody and final process, the sheriff may not retake the prisoner or receive him back without plaintiff's consent.<sup>49</sup> The voluntary return of the prisoner will not prevent the liability of the sheriff for the escape.<sup>50</sup> Consequently, on a recapture or return without authority of plaintiff, there may not be another escape.<sup>51</sup> If a sheriff discharges a prisoner on the promise of another to pay his fine, and the fine is not paid, he may not rearrest the prisoner, but is liable for the fine.<sup>52</sup>

(3) When Escape Negligent

Where there is a negligent escape, in order to relieve himself of liability therefor, the jailer has a right to retake the prisoner on fresh pursuit, and return him to his former custody, and if he does so before action is brought by the creditor for the escape he is excused.

Where there is a negligent escape, in order to relieve himself of liability therefor, the jailer has a right to retake the prisoner on fresh pursuit, and return him to his former custody,<sup>53</sup> even where the negligence is occasioned by a misunderstanding of law,<sup>54</sup> and if he does so before action is brought by the creditor for the escape he is excused.<sup>55</sup> So the voluntary return of the prisoner after such escape and before action is brought is equivalent to a retaking on fresh pursuit.<sup>56</sup> However, the recapture on fresh pursuit, or the voluntary return, should be made before suit is brought for the escape.<sup>57</sup>

A subsequent escape after recapture will not revive the right of action for the former escape.<sup>58</sup>

m. Actions

- (1) In general
- (2) Waiver of right of action
- (3) Form of action

(1) In General

Under the common law, in the event of an escape of a prisoner taken into custody under a capias ad satisfaciendum, the plaintiff has no remedy but to sue the sheriff; but under the statute of William III, as adopted in many of the jurisdictions of the United States, the creditor, in case of an escape, may either retake defendant on a new capias ad satisfaciendum or sue out a feri facias.

Under the common law, in the event of an escape of a prisoner taken into custody under a capias ad satisfaciendum, plaintiff has no remedy but to sue the sheriff.<sup>59</sup> However, under the statute of William III, which is of force in many of the United States, the creditor, in case of an escape, may either retake defendant on a new capias ad satisfaciendum or sue out a feri facias.<sup>60</sup> Under the statutes allowing a prisoner in execution the benefit of the prison bounds on giving security, plaintiff may either retake him<sup>61</sup> or proceed against his security,<sup>62</sup> or, in case the security shall prove deficient, against the sheriff who is ultimately liable for an escape.<sup>63</sup> Under the act of William III, while plaintiff may have a capias ad satisfaciendum or a feri facias, if he elects the first, the second is relinquished.<sup>64</sup> So under a prison bounds act, if plaintiff resorts to the bond, he may not have the feri facias,<sup>65</sup> and if he retakes and imprisons the escaped prisoner the bond is discharged.<sup>66</sup>

Persons entitled to sue. Unless plaintiff could have maintained the original action against the prisoner, no action can be maintained for an escape on mesne process.<sup>67</sup> Furthermore the only party entitled to sue is the one at whose suit the prisoner escaping is shown to have been arrested or charged in execution.<sup>68</sup>

Jurisdiction and venue. An action for an escape from prison in one county may lie in such county, although the judgment on which the suit against the prisoner was founded is of record in another county.<sup>69</sup> A federal court has jurisdiction of an action against a sheriff for permitting the escape of one arrested as a fraudulent debtor, in proceedings in a state court.<sup>70</sup>

(2) Waiver of Right of Action

In order that there may be a waiver of a right of action for an escape, there must be such conduct on the part of the one having the right as shows his voluntary and intentional relinquishment or abandonment thereof.

In order that there may be a waiver of a right of action for an escape, there must be such conduct on the part of the one having the right as shows his voluntary and intentional relinquishment or abandonment thereof.<sup>71</sup> Thus it is not a waiver for a creditor's attorney to appear and protest against a discharge.<sup>72</sup> While it has been held not to amount to a waiver for a creditor to resist an application made under the insolvent laws,<sup>73</sup> it has been held otherwise where the creditor acts with knowledge of the escape.<sup>74</sup> Where one detained under mesne process escapes and the sheriff obtains leave to appear and defend the original suit, and judgment is recovered against the original defendant, plaintiff does not thereby elect to consider such defendant in custody, or to discharge the sheriff, since the proceeding only determines the extent of the sheriff's liability.<sup>75</sup>

(3) Form of Action

Where a statute has not provided a different form of remedy, case is the only form of action which may be brought against a sheriff for the escape of a prisoner committed to his custody, but under some statutory provisions an action of debt may be brought; where a deputy sheriff or jailer permits an escape, the usual course for the sheriff is to resort to the bond of the deputy.

Where a statute has not provided a different form of remedy, case is the only form of action which may be brought against a sheriff for the escape of a prisoner committed to his custody,<sup>76</sup> and where a creditor is unable to obtain judgment on a jail bond by reason of any neglect or default of the sheriff in taking it, or where the debt cannot be collected on it because of the poverty of the signers, case lies against the sheriff as for an escape.<sup>77</sup> However, an action of debt for the escape of a prisoner committed on an execution from a court of record is sometimes authorized by statute.<sup>78</sup> An action of debt given by statute does not take away the common-law right of suing in case, but is a cumulative remedy.<sup>79</sup> In some jurisdictions a sheriff is liable to attachment where, by his negligence and carelessness, he suffers a prisoner to escape,<sup>80</sup> and the injured person need not be driven to his action for an escape.<sup>81</sup>

By sheriff against jailer. Where a deputy sheriff or jailer permits an escape, the usual course for the sheriff is to resort to the bond of the deputy;<sup>82</sup> and if the sheriff has omitted to take a bond, the jailer is answerable only in assumpsit on his implied undertaking to serve the sheriff with diligence and fidelity.<sup>83</sup>

Prisoner committed on mesne process is not a prisoner committed for debt within the meaning of a statute making the sheriff liable in action for debt to the creditor or person to whose use any forfeiture was adjudged, or any debt, damages, or costs awarded against such prisoner, for the full amount of such debt, damages, and costs, for the escape of such prisoner, through the insufficiency of the jail or prison in any county.—Lovell v. Bellows, 7 N. H. 375.

a cause of action.<sup>84</sup> So the complaint or declaration should contain substantive allegations showing that the prisoner escaped<sup>85</sup> with the permission<sup>86</sup> or through the negligence<sup>87</sup> of the sheriff. An escape from the custody of the deputy sheriff may be declared on as an escape from the sheriff.<sup>88</sup> Where a commitment has been alleged, such allegation may be considered as including all the facts necessary to a legal commitment.<sup>89</sup>

Demurrer. An objection which goes merely to the form and not to the substance of a pleading must be raised by special demurrer and may not be taken advantage of on general demurrer.<sup>90</sup>

(2) Plea or Answer

The rules applicable to the plea or answer in civil actions generally are applicable to an action for escape.

The rules applicable to the plea or answer in civil actions generally are applicable to an action for escape.<sup>91</sup> Thus an allegation that the sheriff permitted the escape should be denied either generally or specifically,<sup>92</sup> or by the insertion of an averment in the answer which, if true, would be inconsistent, or in conflict, with such allegation.<sup>93</sup> Each defense in an answer which, by its terms, is declared to be "a further and distinct defense" must be complete in itself, and may not be aided by a resort to other parts of the answer to which it contains no reference in terms or by necessary implication.<sup>94</sup> Where discharge is pleaded, it must be shown how the discharge was made.<sup>95</sup>

(3) Issues, Proof, and Variance

In actions for escape, the rules applicable to issues, proof, and variance in civil actions generally have been applied.

In actions for escape, the rules applicable to issues, proof, and variance in civil actions generally have been applied.<sup>96</sup> Thus it has been held that a voluntary return may not be shown under the general issue,<sup>97</sup> but it has also been held that a defense of fresh pursuit may be so shown.<sup>98</sup> Further, it may be shown on the general issue, in mitigation of damages, that the debtor had no property.<sup>99</sup> Where there is a plea of voluntary return to a single count for escape, plaintiff may, without a new assignment, prove a single escape on any day before suit brought, and defendant may then show a return into custody before suit, and apply his plea to such return;<sup>1</sup> but if plaintiff has not newly assigned, defendant may not show a previous escape and return as a defense.<sup>2</sup>

Variance. In an action against a sheriff for an escape, a variance as to the amount of debt alleged to be due by the prisoner is not material, and will not defeat the action.<sup>3</sup> Although the declaration in case charges a voluntary escape, proof of an escape by gross negligence will sustain a verdict for plaintiff.<sup>4</sup>

o. Evidence

In an action for escape, an actual escape must be proved by the plaintiff, which may be shown by any competent evidence.

The rules applicable to evidence in civil actions generally are applicable to evidence in an action for escape. In an action for escape an actual escape must be proved by plaintiff,<sup>5</sup> which may be shown by any competent evidence.<sup>6</sup> It is competent for the sheriff to prove that there was no negligence on his part and that he used due means to retake the prisoner,<sup>7</sup> or that the prisoner voluntarily returned before suit was brought.<sup>8</sup> In proving the insufficiency of bail, it is not necessary for plaintiff to show that he proceeded to judgment against the bail without success.<sup>9</sup> Evidence on the part of

D. Damages

- (1) In general
- (2) Mitigation of damages

(1) In General

Where the escape is out of execution and the action is in debt against the sheriff on his liability independently of his bond, the plaintiff, on proving the escape, is entitled to recover the whole amount of the debt and costs, and interest; and the same measure of damages has been held applicable for an escape out of execution sued for in case.

Where the escape is out of execution and the action is in debt against the sheriff on his liability independently of his bond, plaintiff, on proving the escape, is entitled to recover the whole amount of the debt and costs,<sup>11</sup> and interest;<sup>12</sup> and the same measure of damages has been held applicable for an escape out of execution sued for in case.<sup>13</sup> However, in an action on the case for an escape on mesne process the jury are not limited, as in an action of debt for an escape on execution, to finding any precise sum, but must assess damages according to the evidence,<sup>14</sup> although only the special damages occasioned by the escape may be recovered.<sup>15</sup> The sheriff's sureties are liable, in an action of debt on the bond, only for the damages actually sustained.<sup>16</sup> Where a state statute makes a sheriff civilly liable for the safe-keeping of prisoners, and any party aggrieved may sue on his bond in the name of the state, the United States may recover expenses of the arrest and keeping of the prisoner, and money expended in recapturing him.<sup>17</sup>

In action by creditor against county. In an action on the case against a county for the escape of an execution debtor by reason of defects in the jail, the special damage which plaintiff has sustained by his escape is the amount to be recovered;<sup>18</sup> and such damage may amount to the whole debt with interest and costs.<sup>19</sup>

In action by sheriff against county. The damages recovered against a sheriff for an escape in consequence of there being no jail is the measure of damages in an action by the sheriff against the county commissioners for not providing a jail.<sup>20</sup>

(2) Mitigation of Damages

Ordinarily, in an action on the case for an escape, the defendant may show, in mitigation of damages, that the prisoner was insolvent or wholly destitute of property; but where the action is debt, or in the nature of debt, the defendant may not show the insolvency of the debtor in mitigation of damages.

Except where and to the extent that the rule may have been changed by statute, in an action on the case for an escape defendant may show, in mitigation of damages, that the prisoner was insolvent or wholly destitute of property;<sup>21</sup> and this whether the escape was voluntary or negligent,<sup>22</sup> although general reputation of insolvency is not admissible.<sup>23</sup> However, where the action is debt, or in the nature of debt, defendant may not show the insolvency of the debtor in mitigation of damages.<sup>24</sup>

General rules apply to the trial, and to judgment and enforcement thereof, in an action for escape.

General rules relating to the trial of civil actions are applicable to actions for escape.<sup>25</sup> Likewise, the general rules as to judgments and their enforcement apply.<sup>26</sup> Since the sheriff is answerable only for the original judgment for the nonpayment of which the prisoner was committed, he should have the benefit of any conditions on which such judgment was payable,<sup>27</sup> and the judgment against him in such a case should not be for a sum payable

The right to compensation and reimbursement for the care and maintenance of prisoners is discussed infra § 25; who is liable therefor, infra § 26; the allowance and payment of claims, infra § 27; accounting for fees and emoluments by sheriffs and like officers, infra § 28; and actions for salaries, fees, and other emoluments, infra § 29.

a. In General

Statutory provisions control with respect to the right of a sheriff or other officer to compensation for the care and maintenance of prisoners, and the amount of such compensation, as well as with respect to the right of such an officer to be reimbursed for expenses incurred by him therein; a jailer who allows prisoners to escape has been held to forfeit his fees for keeping them.

Statutory provisions control with respect to the right of a sheriff or other officer to compensation for the care and maintenance of prisoners, and the amount of such compensation, as well as with respect to the right of such an officer to be reimbursed for expenses incurred by him therein;<sup>31</sup> and a sheriff is not entitled to payment for the safe-keeping of a person not within the purview of the statute.<sup>32</sup> In determining the right to compensation and reimbursement, and the liability of the county or other body therefor, the general rule is that the sheriff takes the office with all its burdens, and subject to the power of the legislature to add new duties, and he may recover no other compensation than that which the law allows;<sup>33</sup> and the same is true of a warden of a penitentiary.<sup>34</sup>

A court has no authority to direct a jailer not to receive a prisoner convicted of crime except on condition of bond being given for the prison charges, nor may a jailer require bond for their payment except in civil cases.<sup>35</sup> Where a sheriff has contracted with the county to keep all the prisoners for a gross sum payable monthly, relinquishing to the county all fees allowed by law for such services, he may not repudiate the contract, after it has been observed by the parties for several years, and recover the excess of the fees over the stipulated compensation, on the ground that the parties, in making the contract, acted under a mistake as to the constitutionality of the statute.<sup>36</sup>

On the other hand, an agreement to accept compensation different from that fixed by law has been held invalid;<sup>37</sup> and it has been held that a jailer may not estop himself to claim the full payment fixed by statute.<sup>38</sup>

Forfeiture of compensation. Where, through negligence or misconduct, persons employed to guard prisoners have allowed them to escape, they have been held not entitled to full compensation,<sup>39</sup> and it has also been held that a jailer who allows prisoners to escape forfeits his fees for keeping them.<sup>40</sup>

(1) In General

Under some statutes a sheriff is not entitled to any additional compensation for services in keeping the jail or looking after the prisoners; reimbursement or compensation for things necessarily used and consumed in boarding prisoners ordinarily should be refused when these things must be deemed as included in, and paid for, by the per diem or per week allowance for boarding, but it is frequently held that a sheriff is entitled to compensation for property purchased for the county and necessary for use in the jail.

Where the statute merely allows a certain sum for the boarding of each prisoner, or allows the actual cost of boarding, a sheriff is not entitled to any additional compensation for services in keeping the jail or looking after the prisoners, since this is a part of his general duty;<sup>41</sup> and, where a specified allowance for the support of prisoners is fixed as the statutory perquisite of his office, a sheriff, although entitled to any incidental profits above the actual cost,<sup>42</sup> must bear the loss if the actual cost exceeds the allowance.<sup>43</sup>

Reimbursement or compensation for things necessarily used and consumed in boarding prisoners ordinarily should be refused, when these things must be deemed as included in, and paid for, by the per diem or per week allowance for boarding;<sup>44</sup> and it has been held that there may be no reimbursement for disinfectants purchased by a sheriff without authorization<sup>45</sup> or for tobacco and other supplies furnished to prisoners.<sup>46</sup> Also, under some statutory provisions, a sheriff is not entitled to be reimbursed for medical and surgical supplies furnished by the order of the jail physician.<sup>47</sup>

On the other hand, it is frequently held that a sheriff is entitled to compensation or reimbursement for property purchased for the county and necessary for use in the jail,<sup>48</sup> such as articles and supplies to keep the jail clean and fit for occupancy<sup>49</sup> and in repair,<sup>50</sup> beds,<sup>51</sup> bedding,<sup>52</sup> brooms and mops,<sup>53</sup> disinfectants, soap, and toilet articles,<sup>54</sup> fuel,<sup>55</sup> gas,<sup>56</sup> heat,<sup>57</sup> light,<sup>58</sup> water,<sup>59</sup> and necessary clothing furnished prisoners,<sup>60</sup> and the repair<sup>61</sup> and laundry<sup>62</sup> thereof; and where it is necessary to remove a dead body to prevent infection the charge for such service must be paid by the county.<sup>63</sup>

Allowance for fraction of day. As a general rule, frequently by virtue of statutory provisions to that effect, a jailer is entitled to his per diem allowance for a whole day although the prisoner is not in jail all day.<sup>64</sup>

Compensation and reimbursement for capture of escaped prisoner. If a prisoner escapes, the sheriff has been held not entitled, as a matter of right, to demand reimbursement for expenses incurred in recapturing him, or compensation for services performed in effecting the recapture.<sup>65</sup>

(1) Under present statute sheriff is entitled to full compensation for fraction of day.—State ex rel. Biggs v. Barclay, 216 S.W.2d 711, 188 Tenn. 26.

Extra compensation for care of insane prisoner. A sheriff is entitled to no extra compensation for the care of an insane prisoner,<sup>66</sup> irrespective of any promise by another person to compensate the sheriff.<sup>67</sup>

(2) Jailer, Turnkey, Guards, and Servants

Ordinarily a sheriff may not recover compensation in addition to his established salary and fees for his services as jailer in maintaining and caring for prisoners, nor may he recover for the services and board of a jailer or turnkey employed by him, but the rule is otherwise under some statutes; in the absence of a statutory provision therefor, an allowance to a sheriff for the expense of a guard usually is not proper.

Ordinarily a sheriff's established salary and fees cover his services as jailer in maintaining and caring for prisoners, and he is not entitled to recover additional compensation therefor,<sup>68</sup> nor may he ordinarily recover for the services and board of a jailer or turnkey employed by him.<sup>69</sup> On the other hand, under some statutes, a sheriff may be entitled to additional compensation for his services as jailer in maintaining and caring for prisoners,<sup>70</sup> as where a sheriff is authorized, when he elects to perform the duties of jailer in person, to retain the fees prescribed therefor in addition to his compensation as sheriff.<sup>71</sup> Moreover, under some statutory provisions, a sheriff is entitled to a specified sum of money per day for attending jail when occupied by a prisoner or prisoners, although he employs deputies as jailers,<sup>72</sup> and, under permissive statutes, a sheriff is entitled to recover the expense of a jailer or turnkey properly employed by him.<sup>73</sup> A sheriff may also be entitled to be reimbursed for the hire of servants in connection with the jail, where in his honest judgment, based on a fair necessity therefor, he employs such servants.<sup>74</sup>

Guards. An allowance to a sheriff for the expense of a guard usually is not proper, in the absence of a statutory provision therefor,<sup>75</sup> although the expense of extra emergency guards necessary to keep a prisoner safely has been held a proper charge against a county.<sup>76</sup> Where the expense of guards is allowed by statute, such an allowance is proper to the extent and within the limitations of the statutory provision;<sup>77</sup> but it has been held that a jailer may not himself be appointed or act as guard and claim compensation therefor.<sup>78</sup> Under some statutory provisions a sheriff is entitled to be reimbursed for the hire of guards in connection with the jail, where in his honest judgment, based on a fair necessity therefor, he employs such guards,<sup>79</sup> and the approval of the county commissioners, or of a judge having jurisdiction in such case, is not a condition precedent thereto.<sup>80</sup>

Matron. Where the law allows to the sheriff a fixed salary in full of all services rendered by him or his deputies or assistants, a woman designated to act as matron, as required by statute, is not entitled to be paid out of the county treasury.<sup>81</sup>

(3) Board of Prisoners

An allowance for compensation for the board of prisoners should be made in accordance with, and subject to, statutory provisions.

Where a statute generally provides for compensation for the board of prisoners, the allowance must be made in accordance with, and subject to, the limitations of the particular statutory provision,<sup>82</sup> whether such compensation is a certain sum per day or week for each prisoner,<sup>83</sup> or whether it is the actual cost of the board,<sup>84</sup> or an amount to be determined by a board or court.<sup>85</sup> Where the statute makes the county liable for the maintenance of prisoners and requires the sheriff to board them, without fixing compensation, he is entitled to recover the actual cost of boarding them,<sup>86</sup> but not for his personal services or for profits in his favor;<sup>87</sup> and this is true although the statute provides that the allowances shall be within certain limits.<sup>88</sup> If the circumstances are such that a prisoner in the custody of a sheriff cannot be confined in the jail, the county is liable for board and other necessities furnished him elsewhere.<sup>89</sup>

Municipal prisoners in county jail. A sheriff has been held entitled to retain amounts paid to him by a municipality for the board of municipal prisoners in the county jail in excess of the amount fixed by the county commissioners for boarding prisoners.<sup>90</sup>

(4) Medical Attendance

Under a statute providing for medical attendance to prisoners, and compensation therefor, the general rule is that no allowance may be made except under the circumstances and in the manner provided by statute, although an exception to this rule has been recognized in the case of a physician employed in the case of an emergency; in the absence of a statutory provision for medical attendance it has been held that such attendance is a proper expense of imprisonment.

Under a statute providing for medical attendance to prisoners, and compensation therefor, the general rule is that no allowance may be made except under the circumstances and in the manner provided by statute;<sup>91</sup> but an exception to this rule has been recognized in the case of a physician employed in the case of an emergency.<sup>92</sup> In the absence of a statutory provision for medical attendance it has been held that such attendance is a proper expense of imprisonment.<sup>93</sup> However, it has also been held that the employment of a physician by a sheriff<sup>94</sup> or by jail inspectors<sup>95</sup> does not impose liability on the county for services rendered by the physician, and that no payment may be made out of the county fund for nursing a prisoner confined in a jail on a criminal charge.<sup>96</sup>

(5) Persons Confined under Civil Process

Whether a jailer may recover for the board or support of prisoners confined on civil process depends on statutory provisions.

A statute providing that the county commissioners shall allow a jailer reasonable compensation for the support of prisoners confined on criminal process does not entitle the jailer to recover from the county for the board of prisoners confined on civil process;<sup>97</sup> and a jailer is not bound to receive a poor prisoner in a civil action and incur expenses of his support without some indemnity therefor.<sup>98</sup> Where a tax collector commits a delinquent taxpayer to the county jail, the jailer may not recover for his support while in jail from the town whose selectmen issued the tax warrant, in the absence of an agreement to pay for such support and in the absence of statutory provision imposing such lia-

Reason for rule

The legislature having made no provision for municipality's payment to county of any part of expense incurred in maintaining jail for use of municipal prisoners, it remains for county commissioners to say whether their consent to use of jail by municipality shall be conditioned on payment to county, so that latter may not recover amounts paid by municipality to sheriff for municipal prisoners' board in excess of rate fixed by county commissioners, especially as statutes provide for payment of county expense by other counties, states and United States.—Scovel v. Pennington County, supra.

(6) Residence of Jailer

While a jailer may be entitled to recover the expense of maintaining the rooms occupied by him, where he occupies such rooms in pursuance of a statute, and such rooms constitute a part of the jail for the maintenance of which the county is liable, under some statutes a jailer may not be entitled to recover for the maintenance of, and supplies for, his residence.

While a jailer may be entitled to recover the expense of maintaining the rooms occupied by him, where he occupies such rooms in pursuance of a statute, and such rooms constitute a part of the jail, for the maintenance of which the county is liable,<sup>2</sup> under some statutes a jailer may not be entitled to recover for the maintenance of, and supplies for, his residence,<sup>3</sup> so that, where the residence occupied by a jailer during his term of office is not owned by the county, he may not recover from the county for the rent, heat, light, and water for his residence, in the absence of an express contract therefor.<sup>4</sup>

(7) Federal Prisoners

The compensation for the support of federal prisoners in state or county prisons may include not only the expense of feeding the prisoners, but it may also include a just charge for all other supplies and services incident to maintaining and guarding them; whether a sheriff is entitled to all the money received for the support of federal prisoners, or to any part of such money, depends on statutory provisions.

The compensation for the support of federal prisoners in state or county prisons, being, as discussed supra § 3, a matter of contract, may include not only the expense of feeding the prisoners,<sup>5</sup> but also a just charge for all other supplies and services incident to maintaining and guarding them.<sup>6</sup> Under some statutory provisions a sheriff is entitled to all of the money received for the support of federal prisoners,<sup>7</sup> and the county has been held to have no interest in money in the hands of the sheriff representing profits derived from feeding federal prisoners, where, under the statute, the sheriff acts as jailer for the United States in keeping and caring for such prisoners.<sup>8</sup> Also, under some statutory provisions, the county is not entitled to the amount paid to the sheriff for keeping federal prisoners, in excess of the rate fixed by the county commissioners, inasmuch as the excess amount belongs to the sheriff;<sup>9</sup> and the county has been held not to be entitled to any compensation for the use of the jail.<sup>10</sup>

On the other hand, the fees received by a jailer, under some statutes, for keeping federal prisoners belong to the county and not to the jailer who is on a salary basis.<sup>11</sup> So, under a statute providing that a sheriff shall receive a specified salary as full compensation for the services required of him by law, or by virtue of his office, he is not entitled to retain any part of the amount paid him by the federal government for the support of federal prisoners.<sup>12</sup>

Authority to equip residence

County was required to furnish heat, light, and water for jail building, including portion occupied by jailer, deputy, or sheriff in charge of prisoners, where county had obtained grant of authority from state legislature "to erect sheriff's residence and county jail combined in one building and equip residence, and where sheriffs of county and their families had occupied county jail as living quarters for number of years.—Day v. Board of Com'rs of Cowley County, 71 P.2d 871, 146 Kan. 492.

Statute construed

Statute requiring board of county commissioners to fix sum to compensate county for money expended for fuel, light, and other expenses in keeping state prisoners and United States prisoners in county jail, and sheriff to collect such sum from federal and state governments, was intended to make the United States share in operating expense of jail, and words "fuel, light, and other expenses" were intended to exclude charges for depreciation and obsolescence, and committed determination of proper allocation of actual out of pocket expense as between state and federal prisoners on a per prisoner basis to board of commissioners.—Adamson v. Minnehaha County, 293 N.W. 542, 67 S.D. 423.

7. Mont.—Majors v. Lewis, etc., County, 201 P. 268, 60 Mont. 608. 50 C.J. p 364 note 11.

8. Okl.—Board of Com'rs of Tulsa County v. Mars, 117 P.2d 129, 189 Okl. 339.

Reason for rule

Since statehood the sheriffs of the various counties of the state have retained funds derived as profits from feeding prisoners with the acquiescence and consent of officials charged with administration of fiscal affairs of the counties and state, and the right of sheriffs to such funds has not been heretofore questioned; acquiescence in the construction of the statute is entitled to great weight, even though not participated in by the judiciary.—Board of Com'rs of Tulsa County v. Mars, supra.

11. Ky.—Holland v. Fayette County, 41 S.W.2d 651, 240 Ky. 37.

12. Ariz.—Adams v. Maricopa County, 145 P. 884, 16 Ariz. 418. 50 C.J. p 364 note 14.

Also, a statute, allowing a salary to the sheriff in full compensation for all his services and requiring him to pay over to the county all fees and charges received by him, applies to all moneys coming into the hands of the sheriff for the support of federal prisoners;<sup>13</sup> and a sum paid in addition to the amount allowed for the care of the prisoners, to cover the individual liability of the sheriff for damages for keeping the prisoners in custody, belongs to the county and not to the sheriff,<sup>14</sup> and the sheriff is not entitled to compensation even for extra services rendered such prisoners.<sup>15</sup> Under statutes of the nature just referred to, and other provisions requiring an allowance to the sheriff of his necessary expenses in boarding prisoners, the expenses incurred for the feeding of federal prisoners are to be allowed in the same manner and at the same rates as those for prisoners committed by the state.<sup>16</sup>

c. Change of Compensation

Where it is the official duty of an officer to board the prisoners in jail, the compensation allowed him therefor has been held to be an emolument within the meaning of a constitutional provision prohibiting any change thereof during an officer's term of office; but it has also been held that fees paid to a jailer for feeding prisoners are not within such a constitutional inhibition, where the jailer has no inherent duty to feed prisoners in jail.

Where it is the official duty of an officer to board the prisoners in the jail, the compensation allowed him therefor has been held to be an emolument within the meaning of a constitutional provision prohibiting any change thereof during an officer's term of office;<sup>17</sup> but it has also been held that fees paid to a jailer for feeding prisoners are not within such a constitutional inhibition, where the jailer has no inherent duty to feed prisoners in jail.<sup>18</sup> Moreover, a constitutional provision of this nature is a limitation on the power of the legislature alone, and does not prevent the court from making changes in the emoluments of a sheriff as authorized by the statute in force at the time of his election.<sup>19</sup>

changing the method of punishing criminals, although it indirectly affects the jailer's fees.<sup>20</sup> Also, where an officer, required to furnish the food of prisoners, may be reimbursed only for the actual cost thereof, the fluctuating cost from time to time has been held not within a prohibition against the change of the salary of an officer during his term of office.<sup>21</sup> Furthermore, under a constitution so providing, the inhibition against increasing or decreasing compensation of public officers during their term of office does not prevent the legislature from increasing or diminishing the allowance to sheriffs or other officers for feeding, transferring, or guarding prisoners.<sup>22</sup>

Inasmuch as an allowance for board should be made in conformity with statute, as discussed supra subdivision b (3) of this section, where a statute fixes the amount to be allowed for boarding prisoners it may not be changed, or the sheriff deprived thereof, by the county commissioners.<sup>23</sup> Under a statute reducing the compensation of sheriffs for boarding prisoners in jail, but declaring that it shall not apply to any sheriff in office at the time of the adoption of the constitution then in force, but shall be in operation after the expiration of the terms of such sheriffs, a sheriff who has been appointed since the passage of the act, to fill the unexpired term of one who was in office at the time of its passage, may not claim the benefit of the proviso.<sup>24</sup> An act increasing the fees of county officers a certain per cent has been held not to increase the compensation allowed the sheriff for boarding prisoners.<sup>25</sup> A statute changing the basis of the compensation of a sheriff in certain respects has been held not to destroy the right of the sheriff to receive and retain amounts paid to him as board for prisoners under an earlier statute.<sup>26</sup>

d. Persons Entitled

Ordinarily the sheriff, and not his deputy or jailer, is entitled to receive and collect the fees and other compensation for services as jailer, and for boarding and guarding prisoners in jail, although under some statutes the sheriff is not so entitled where the duties of jailer are performed by someone other than himself.

Ordinarily the sheriff, and not his deputy or jailer, is entitled to receive and collect the fees and other compensation for services as jailer, and for boarding and guarding prisoners in the jail,<sup>27</sup> although under some statutes the sheriff is not so entitled where the duties of jailer are performed by someone other than himself.<sup>28</sup> Where, by law, an allowance is made to a sheriff for the maintenance and care of prisoners, an individual who furnishes such care and maintenance must look to the sheriff for his pay, and not to the county.<sup>29</sup> A statute relating to the fees of a county jailer has been held not to apply to a chief of police who performs the duties of city jailer.<sup>30</sup>

De facto jailer. It has been held that one who acts as jailer under color of title is entitled to the amount allowed him by the court for boarding prisoners,<sup>31</sup> although he might not be entitled to fees for committing and releasing prisoners.<sup>32</sup>

§ 26. — Who Liable

- a. In general
- b. Liability of county
- c. Liability of city, town, or other municipality
- d. Liability as between counties and as between towns
- e. Liability of prisoner

a. In General

The United States is liable for the maintenance of persons committed for contempt under its laws; a state is liable for jail fees or other prison expenses when, and only when, such liability is imposed by statute.

Since the United States, by force of statute, is liable for the expense of confining persons arrested or committed under its laws, it is liable for the maintenance of persons committed for contempt under its laws;<sup>33</sup> and, hence, the United States,<sup>34</sup> and not the creditors,<sup>35</sup> is liable for the maintenance of a bankrupt committed for contempt.

Liability of state. A state is liable for jail fees or other prison expenses when, and only when, such liability is imposed by statute,<sup>36</sup> and in no case may the state be made liable for expenses connected with jails merely by implication.<sup>37</sup>

b. Liability of County

Under statutes imposing on counties liability for the care of prisoners, the liability of a county is controlled by, and is subject to, the restrictions of the particular statute.

Under statutes imposing on counties liability for the care of prisoners, the liability of a county is controlled by, and is subject to, the restrictions of the particular statute.<sup>38</sup> While, under some statutory provisions, the liability of a county extends only to the maintenance of a jail building and its equipment,<sup>39</sup> a county is generally liable for the care and maintenance of its own prisons and of prisoners confined therein for offenses committed within the county.<sup>40</sup> In some jurisdictions, a county is also liable to the sheriff for the board of prisoners committed under authority of a statute, in pursuance

Statutory provision that state shall pay stipulated amount for preparing and serving food of prisoners in county jail includes preparation for its service and hence fuel for cooking it and excludes idea of payment therefor by county; and the term "maintenance" in statute requiring payment of expense of maintenance of county jail by county does not include such expense.—Holcombe v. ### Where sentence commuted

Where one sentenced to death was kept for county at state penitentiary until commutation of sentence, county was liable for day and night guard at statutory rates; the fact that sentence was commuted did not prevent state from recovering for such expenses, under statutes providing for payment of certain sum after execution.—State, for Use of Board of Welfare, v. Board of Com'rs for Anne Arundel County, 170 A. 749, 166 Md. 223.

of a city, village, or town ordinance,<sup>41</sup> and, by virtue of statute, a county may be required to feed and provide suitable and efficient guards for convicts sentenced to the county chain gang by municipalities.<sup>42</sup> Where a county prisoner suffering from contagious disease has been removed to a pesthouse or other place, rent of such place has been held a proper charge against the county.<sup>43</sup>

In the absence of a statute providing otherwise, a town or city is not liable for the support of its prisoners in the county jail, but, by virtue of statute, cities or towns may be liable for the care and support of prisoners confined in the county jail for a violation of their ordinances.

In the absence of a statute providing otherwise, a town or city is not liable for the support of its prisoners in the county jail,<sup>44</sup> but, by virtue of statute, cities or towns may be liable for the care and support of prisoners confined in the county jail for a violation of their ordinances,<sup>45</sup> either directly to the sheriff or jailer,<sup>46</sup> or by way of reimbursement or compensation to the county.<sup>47</sup> Under some statutory provisions, the board of county commissioners may determine whether their consent to the use of a county jail by a municipality shall be conditioned on any payment by the municipality to the county.<sup>48</sup>

Under permissive statute, the municipal council may obligate the municipality by contract with the county commissioners to pay a sum not exceeding a certain amount per day per prisoner for the care and maintenance of prisoners in quarters leased from the commissioners,<sup>49</sup> but, under such a statute, the total cost for housing and maintaining a prisoner, including guarding the prisoner, should not exceed a designated amount.<sup>50</sup> In the absence of a statute, charter provision, or ordinance, a municipal corporation is not liable to the keeper of its jail for the support of prisoners charged with violations of its ordinances.<sup>51</sup> Under some statutory provisions, where municipal authorities establish a municipal chain gang, they are required to pay all the expenses of dieting, guarding, etc., of the convicts sentenced by such authorities to such chain gangs.<sup>52</sup>

Where a prisoner from one county is confined in the jail of another county, the former county ordinarily is either directly liable to the sheriff or jailer or other person entitled thereto for the maintenance and guarding of prisoners, or it must reimburse the latter county for its payment for such expenses; liability as between towns depends on statute.

Where by reason of a change of venue, or because of the want of a jail or its insufficiency, a prisoner from one county is confined in the jail of another county, the former county ordinarily is either directly liable to the sheriff or jailer or other person entitled thereto for the maintenance and guarding of prisoners,<sup>53</sup> or it must reimburse the latter county for its payment for such expenses.<sup>54</sup> The cost of special guards for prisoners coming from different counties for safekeeping should be shared by the several counties.<sup>55</sup>

Liability as between towns depends on the statute,<sup>56</sup> and the town in which the jail is located is ordinarily liable to the keeper with the right to recover from the town from which the prisoner was sent or in which he had his settlement or domicile.<sup>57</sup>

e. Liability of Prisoner

In the absence of statute to the contrary, an action cannot be maintained against a prisoner or his estate, after his death, to recover the price of his board or compensation for his care; and, ordinarily, the expenses of a guard must also be paid by the proper authorities, and not by the prisoners who were guarded.

In the absence of a statute to the contrary, an action cannot be maintained against a prisoner to recover the price of his board,<sup>58</sup> although the prisoner requested it to be furnished,<sup>59</sup> since it is the duty of the prison authorities to furnish such food. Moreover, a sheriff is not entitled to recover compensation for the care of an inmate from his estate after his death,<sup>60</sup> irrespective of anything said by his children or guardian.<sup>61</sup> Ordinarily, the expenses of a guard must also be paid by the proper public authorities,<sup>62</sup> and not by the prisoners who were guarded.<sup>63</sup> On the other hand, where a prisoner, who has been removed to a hospital, has paid the expense for medical service, he is not entitled to have it deducted from the amount of the fine imposed on him on the ground of his ignorance of the liability of the county.<sup>64</sup> Under some statutes, a town which has paid the board of one confined in a jail of another town, because of an offense committed in the former, may bring an action to recover such expense from such person, irrespective of his ability to defray the expense of his support.<sup>65</sup>

§ 27. — Allowance and Payment

b. Conclusiveness and effect of allowance or report

a. In General

Claims for allowances for the care and maintenance of prisoners should be presented in the form and manner and within the time prescribed by law; statutory provisions usually control as to what amounts and items should be paid or allowed to a jailer or sheriff for the care and maintenance of prisoners.

Claims for allowances for the care and maintenance of prisoners should be presented in the form and manner<sup>66</sup> and within the time<sup>67</sup> prescribed by law. Also, the duty of fixing the fees of a sheriff for boarding prisoners should be performed at the time designated,<sup>68</sup> and an appeal from an order fixing an allowance should be taken within the statutory time.<sup>69</sup>

Under some statutes, a sheriff may petition the court to fix a per diem allowance to be paid him in addition to other compensation for the custody, care, and maintenance of prisoners.<sup>70</sup> Where the statute so provides, a jailer's fees for county prisoners should be referred monthly to the judge or chairman of the county court for inspection, who should audit it and cause the clerk to issue a warrant for the amount allowed,<sup>71</sup> and, under such statute, the sheriff need not present records showing the admission and discharge of prisoners by dates and time of day.<sup>72</sup> A sheriff may be directed to present an account to the commissioners' court for the expense incurred in the safekeeping and maintenance of prisoners.<sup>73</sup>

Entry in contradictory language

Although the language was contradictory, where county judge inspected or examined certified account of sheriff for board and keep of county prisoners and turnkey fees and placed thereon the entry "Approved: not audited", there was sufficient compliance with statute, and it was deemed that the county judge made an examination of the face of the accounts before approving them.—State ex rel. Biggs v. Barclay, 216 S.W.2d 711, 188 Tenn. 26.

72. Tenn.—State ex rel. Biggs v. Barclay, supra.

Although the keeping of an account and its presentation as required by statute may not be a condition precedent to the allowance of a claim,<sup>74</sup> if sustained by satisfactory evidence,<sup>75</sup> yet, on a failure to do so, the sheriff may be entitled to recover from the county only such expenses as he is able to show by clear and satisfactory evidence that he actually incurred, and only such as are reasonable.<sup>76</sup> Where the sheriff has furnished the itemized statement required by statute for feeding prisoners, the state auditor may not refuse to issue a warrant to cover the bill because the sheriff failed to furnish the state prison inspector a daily ration sheet required by a rule of the inspector,<sup>77</sup> although the inspector is authorized to supervise the feeding of prisoners and to make lawful rules and regulations relating thereto.<sup>78</sup>

Where there is no statute on the subject, reasonable charges may be allowed if it has been an established custom,<sup>79</sup> and such charges may continue to be allowed until the sheriff has notice.<sup>80</sup> However, statutory provisions usually control as to what amounts and items should be paid or allowed to a jailer or sheriff for the care and maintenance of prisoners,<sup>81</sup> and, under some statutory provisions, an allowance may be made retroactive.<sup>82</sup> A board, by its acts, may ratify the doings of a sheriff in good faith and become bound to pay therefor,<sup>83</sup> as where the board for a time pays for the guard of prisoners.<sup>84</sup>

Preference. Ordinarily, a sheriff has no preference over other creditors of the county in the payment of claims for boarding prisoners and transporting them to the penitentiary.<sup>85</sup>

of a board of supervisors to a writ of certiorari to review its decision reducing the sheriff's charges for board in his account against the county must be taken as true.<sup>86</sup>

Estoppel of claimant. Where a sheriff presents bills for boarding prisoners and they are allowed at the precise sum at which he renders them, and are paid, he is estopped to make any other claim,<sup>87</sup> unless he acted under duress;<sup>88</sup> and the fact that he fixed the amount under protest, and accepted the allowances because he was in need of money, does not amount to duress.<sup>89</sup>

b. Conclusiveness and Effect of Allowance or Report

Where the allowance to a jailer for maintenance and care of prisoners is in the discretion of a board or court, its determination in some jurisdictions is regarded as conclusive, but in other jurisdictions such a determination is regarded merely as the exercise of a sound legal discretion which is conclusive only in the absence of a showing that the discretion has been abused.

§ 28. — Accounting for Fees and Emoluments

Statutory provisions control with respect to an accounting by a sheriff or jailer for fees and emoluments received by him.

Statutory provisions control with respect to an accounting by a sheriff or jailer for fees and emoluments received by him.<sup>98</sup> Where a statute so provides, fees received by a sheriff as keeper of the jail must be accounted for by him,<sup>99</sup> and he must also account for any surplus, remaining in his hands, of moneys paid to him from the county treasury for the victualing of prisoners,<sup>1</sup> as well as for any surplus of moneys furnished for the policing

of the jail, after paying the salaries of the deputy keepers;<sup>2</sup> and, in order properly to perform this duty, it is the duty of the officer to keep an accurate account of such fees and emoluments.<sup>3</sup> Under some statutes, moneys received by a sheriff for the board of prisoners do not constitute fees for which he must account.<sup>4</sup>

By force of some constitutional and statutory provisions, a jailer may be required to report to the fiscal court all moneys received by him,<sup>5</sup> from all sources,<sup>6</sup> by virtue of his office, including receipts from the federal government for keeping federal prisoners,<sup>7</sup> and he may include in his report all allowable expenditures.<sup>8</sup> Although, under such provisions, a year, and not the sheriff's term of office, is the unit for accounting,<sup>9</sup> a failure to make an annual report and accounting does not preclude the jailer from making his accounting with the court for his entire term of office.<sup>10</sup>

Where a statute, making provision for the settle-

Presumption not overcome

Fact that county was put to almost no extra expense in keeping federal prisoners in county jail was insufficient to overcome presumption of regularity attending resolution of board of county commissioners fixing expense of county for fuel and light in connection with keeping of federal prisoners at certain sum per day, and hence sheriff was not entitled to recover from county such sum collected from federal government for federal prisoners and paid by sheriff to county.—Adamson v. Minnehaha County, supra.

In Texas

(1) Under statute now in force allowances to sheriff for safekeeping prisoners are not fees of office for which he is accountable.—McKinney v. Collingsworth County, Civ.App., 159 S.W.2d 234—Nolan County v. Yarbrough, Civ.App., 34 S.W.2d 302—Binford v. Harris County, Civ.App., 261 S.W. 535.

(2) Such allowances are considered mere perquisites of the office.—McKinney v. Collingsworth County, Civ.App., 159 S.W.2d 234.

(3) However, under statute relative to an allowance for support and maintenance of prisoners, net profits made by sheriff should be reported as fees of office.—McKinney v. Collingsworth County, Civ.App., 159 S.W.2d 234—Cook v. Nacogdoches County, Civ.App., 147 S.W.2d 943, error dismissed, judgment correct—Binford v. Harris County, Civ.App., 261 S.W. 535.

(4) Under earlier statute, no one of charges allowed sheriff for safekeeping, support, and maintenance of prisoners was a fee of office subject to being accounted for, but each was merely a perquisite or incidental benefit that sheriff was expected to keep for his own.—Harris County v. Hammond, Civ.App., 203 S.W. 451, error refused—Harris County v. Hammond, Civ.App., 203 S.W. 445, error refused.

ment with the keeper of a penitentiary at the expiration of his term, provides for the valuation of the raw materials, stock, and manufactured articles on hand, by appraisers to be appointed by commissioners of the sinking fund, the acquiescence by the board in the report and valuation of the appraisers is binding on the state,<sup>11</sup> in the absence of fraud<sup>12</sup> or a departure from the authority conferred by statute.<sup>13</sup> Under some statutory provisions, where a city jailer receives and keeps county, state and United States prisoners, the city may not compel him to account to it for the fees received for such services,<sup>14</sup> except to the extent that the salary paid by the city to the jailer exceeds the minimum salary which under the law it is obliged to pay.<sup>15</sup>

§ 29. — Actions

The general rules governing civil actions ordinarily apply to an action for the recovery or the enforcement of payment of the salary, fees, or other emoluments of a sheriff or other prison officer; but where the statute gives a jailer a special action for his fees, it must be strictly pursued.

ficer.<sup>16</sup> However, where the statute gives a jailer a special action for his fees, it must be strictly pursued.<sup>17</sup> Under some statutory provisions, a sheriff may not sue the county for the amount due him for the safekeeping of prisoners until after his claim has been presented to the commissioners' court and refused.<sup>18</sup> It has been held that if a county refuses to pay for the necessary guarding of prisoners, the sheriff may pay therefor and recover as for money paid for the benefit of the county.<sup>19</sup>

Pleading. In a suit to recover for the safekeeping or maintenance of prisoners, plaintiff should allege sufficient facts to constitute a cause of action,<sup>20</sup> and a complaint which fails to set out the actual expenses incurred by plaintiff may be dismissed.<sup>21</sup>

Evidence. General rules apply as to the burden of proof,<sup>22</sup> and as to the admissibility and competency of evidence,<sup>23</sup> as well as to the sufficiency of the evidence,<sup>24</sup> in a suit to recover for the maintenance or safekeeping of prisoners. Where defendant files a crossaction to recover back sums alleged to have been illegally paid to plaintiff for feeding prisoners, defendant has the burden of proving that the amounts sued for were illegally paid.<sup>25</sup>

the company or observation of others; secrecy.<sup>2</sup>

The right of privacy is discussed generally in the C.J.S. title Right of Privacy § 1 et seq, also 54 C. J. p 816 note 1 et seq. The right to privacy from overlooking windows is treated in Adjoining Landowners § 49.

"Private" is also defined as meaning concealed;<sup>8</sup> secret;<sup>9</sup> confidential;<sup>10</sup> lonely; solitary; secluded; sequestered from company or observation.<sup>11</sup>

Stated negatively, the term is defined as meaning not general;<sup>12</sup> not open;<sup>13</sup> not public;<sup>14</sup> not publicly known;<sup>15</sup> and, in somewhat different senses, not public in character or nature, as a private citizen;<sup>16</sup> not invested with, or engaged in, public office or employment.<sup>17</sup>

"Private" has been held to be synonymous with "local" see 54 C.J.S. p 660 note 55, and "particular" see 67 C.J.S. p 881 note 5.

It has been contrasted with or distinguished from "governmental" see 38 C.J.S. p 969 note 79, and "public."<sup>18</sup>

Private parts. A term not always given a strict technical meaning, but which includes the organs of reproduction and their immediate vicinity.<sup>19</sup> Apart from technical distinctions, it sufficiently describes the female organ of genitiation and its immediate vicinity, not only for that particular portion anatomically known as the womb, but for the vagina, the urethra, and lips of the womb.<sup>20</sup>

Private right. A term which cannot be defined further than to say that it includes all those duties due from one person to another for the breach of which the law gives an action.<sup>21</sup> The terms "private right" and "public right" are distinguishable,<sup>22</sup> and it has been said that the test as to whether a matter is a public right or a private right appears to be whether the right is such as to affect the public generally or merely to affect a class of individuals within the political subdivision.<sup>23</sup> The term "private right" is treated in Property § 6.

Private way. The word "private," as applied to a way, connotes privately owned as differentiated from publicly owned, or dedicated to public use voluntarily or by eminent domain.<sup>24</sup> It likewise implies a way of convenience for those engaged in common or related activities in a given area.<sup>25</sup>

ment of a real nature,<sup>27</sup> and, as such, the subject of private property.<sup>28</sup> It is a property right of which the owner cannot be deprived regardless of whether or not he would be injured by the taking,<sup>29</sup> and it may be acquired by grant, reservation, or under a statute authorizing its establishment.<sup>30</sup> Private ways are either appendant or in gross.<sup>31</sup> Statutory private ways are ways laid out under public authority which are private only in name, but are in all other respects public;<sup>32</sup> ways laid out by the

"To every private way there are two essential requisites, first, the terminus a quo, or the point or place from which the grantee is to set out in order to use the way, and the terminus ad quem, the place where the way is to end; and second, that the grantor has the right, not the mere revocable permission, of setting out from the terminus a quo, and proceeding to and entering the terminus ad quem. It is one of the most important of incorporeal hereditaments, in which one man has an interest and a right, though another man is the owner of the soil over which it is claimed. It is simply an easement or a privilege, conferring no interest in the land."—Garrison v. Rudd, 19 Ill. 558, 563.

Classes or divisions

"The common-law writers divided private ways into several classes, according to the purpose or purposes for which the right of way could be used. Thus Lord Coke, adopting the civil law, divided them into three kinds; a footway, called iter; a footway and horseway, called actus; and a cartway, which embraced the other two, called via. To which was added a driftway, a road over which cattle could be driven. . . . Woolrych, in his work on the subject, also makes these four classes of ways: footways; footways and horseways; foot, horse, and carriage ways; and driftways. . . . But these old classifications of private ways are not exhaustive of the subject; for as a private way for any particular purpose could always be created by a grant, and, in theory, always rested upon a grant, actual or implied, it is evident that when one person granted to another a right of way extending from the land of the grantee over the land of the grantor, for the private use of the grantee, in any manner and for any particular purpose, a private way was created."—Jones v. Venable, 47 S.E. 549, 550, 130 Ga. 1, 1 Ann.Cas. 185.

§ 1. Definition, Nature, and Distinctions

A "private road" has been defined as a road established by public authority chiefly for the accommodation of an individual or individuals, and at his or their instance and expense.

A "private road" has been defined as a road established by public authority chiefly for the accommodation of an individual or individuals, and at his or their instance and expense.<sup>1</sup> In accurate legal contemplation, the term involves a contradiction.<sup>2</sup> It is unknown to the common law, having its origin in American legislation, and cannot be regarded as having been employed as a substitute for the word "way" at common law.<sup>3</sup> As to the real nature of a private road, some early decisions hold that the term "private road," as used in the statutes, is in reality what its name implies, a way for the exclusive use by travel by the particular person or persons for whom it is laid out, and not for public use in any sense.<sup>4</sup> However, as a general rule, especially in later decisions, the courts have construed the term "private road," as used in the statutes, as meaning a public road in the sense that it is open to all who see fit to use it, although the principal benefit inures to the individual or individuals at whose request it was laid out.<sup>5</sup> The term "private road," it has been said, is used merely for the purpose of classification,<sup>6</sup> and to distinguish a class of public roads benefiting private individuals who, instead of the public at large, should bear the expense of their establishment and maintenance.<sup>7</sup> The fact that a road is designated as private<sup>8</sup> or that a private individual pays for the right of way<sup>9</sup> does not change its character, provided it is in fact a public road.

The diversity of views as to the nature of private roads may be ascribed to some extent, but not altogether, to a difference in the wording of the statutes. Accordingly, as discussed in Eminent Domain § 34, where the construction prevails that a "private road" is a public road in the sense that it is open to all who see fit to use it, the validity of the statutes which authorize the taking of land for such a purpose has been uniformly upheld as a legitimate exercise of the power of eminent domain. On the other hand, as similarly discussed in Eminent Domain § 34, where the statutes are construed as creating a road which the public has no right to use, such statutes have been held invalid, except where, as is the case in many states, as discussed in Easements §§ 18, 29, 35, the condemnation of private property for a private road or way of necessity over the lands of another, differing from private ways acquired by prescription or grant only in the method of acquisition, is expressly authorized by the organic law of the state.<sup>10</sup> Where the right to such way is conferred by statute enacted under constitutional authority, it is not a personal right, but pertains to the land to which it becomes appurtenant.<sup>11</sup>

"Right of way" over another's land has been defined as the forced expropriation of a participation therein.<sup>12</sup>

Private path. A "private path" has been defined as a neighborhood road<sup>13</sup> running from one public road to another from a public place to another public place.<sup>14</sup>

Distinctions. A private way is an incorporeal hereditament which may be created or extinguished by the acts of the owners of the servient and dominant tenements as private individuals,<sup>15</sup> while private roads do not become attached to the land of the party at whose instance they are laid out, but are established for the use of the public as well as the party asking for the road and may be discontinued or changed when the public interests require it;<sup>16</sup> and the public authorities alone have the power to create or extinguish such road.<sup>17</sup>

§ 2. Location and Termini

Although statutory provisions must be observed, the authorities vested with power to lay out a road may exercise a reasonable discretion in varying the route proposed as the public interest may require, provided the route adheres to the termini and the general course stated in the petition.

Although statutory provisions as to the location of a private road must be observed,<sup>18</sup> the authorities vested with the power to lay out a road should determine the propriety of its location and are not obliged to lay it out on the route selected by applicant.<sup>19</sup> They may exercise a reasonable discretion in varying the route proposed as the public interest may require,<sup>20</sup> provided it adheres to the termini and the general course stated in the petition.<sup>21</sup> In determining the location of the road, the authorities must consider the distance,<sup>22</sup> the most practical way,<sup>23</sup> and the least injury to the person over whose land passage is granted,<sup>24</sup> and, at the same time, proper regard should be had to the interests of the person claiming the right of way.<sup>25</sup> Accordingly, applicant for a private road is not entitled to select his own route where the owner of the land over which the route is asked tenders one which is reasonably convenient and practical,<sup>26</sup> and, conversely, the owner cannot exact that an extremely circuitous, impracticable, and expensive route should be taken by applicant, because it may happen to be less burdensome to the former.<sup>27</sup>

A road cannot be laid out except between the termini prescribed by the statute which authorizes the laying out of the the road.<sup>28</sup> Generally the terminus a quo, as fixed by the statute, is an in-

23. La.—Mercer v. Daws, App., 186 So. 877.

Evidence held sufficient

(1) In proceeding to establish roadway over another's land from dwelling house to public highway, evidence supported finding that road proposed by petitioner and laid out by viewers appointed by the county court was the most direct and also the least expensive in construction and maintenance.—Parrott v. Fullerton, 193 S.W.2d 654, 209 Ark. 1018.

(2) In suit to compel conveyance to plaintiff of right of way from his land over defendant's adjoining land to public road, evidence showed that route requested in petition was most practicable and shortest possible and that it was not route most injurious to defendant as depriving him of proper headlands for use in cultivating his adjoining lots, in view of court's reduction of width of way demanded by plaintiff so as to allow additional space for headlands on either side of way.—Wells v. Only issue in case

In action by owners of inclosed estate to establish passageway over defendants' land to public road, where defendant without qualification tendered to plaintiffs a right of passage over a route other than the one sought by plaintiffs, the only issue in the case was which of the two routes should be adopted for plaintiffs' use.—Martini v. Terminus held not within statute

In action by landowner for cartway across adjoining land based on claim that landowner had no means of egress to private roads, where

A road cannot be laid out so as to permit a person to pass over the land of another merely for the purpose of passing from one tract to another tract owned by him, under a statute empowering the highway surveyor to lay out a road from one's land to a mill, market, public landing, or other public road.<sup>44</sup> Likewise, such a road may not be laid out under a statute assuming to authorize it because it would be the taking of private property for a private purpose, in violation of organic law.<sup>45</sup> However, it has been held that a landowner is entitled to a private road over intervening land although after leaving the private road, he must cross other lands of his own to reach a public road.<sup>46</sup>

Highway beyond boundary of county. Where a road granted terminates short of a public highway for want of jurisdiction in the commissioners to grant the right, as where the highway is beyond the boundary of their county,<sup>47</sup> it cannot be sustained by individual grants of a way from that point to the highway.<sup>48</sup>

§ 3. Establishment

Particular matters with respect to the establishment of a private road are discussed in detail in the sections immediately following.

Examine Pocket Parts for later cases.

§ 4. — Jurisdiction and Power to Establish

The power to authorize the laying out of a private road exists only where it has been clearly conferred by legislative enactment, conforming to the limitations imposed by the constitution on the lawmaking power, and then only under the circumstances and conditions prescribed by the enactment.

The power to grant a private road is an exercise of the right of eminent domain.<sup>49</sup> Accordingly, as the power to exercise the right of eminent domain is in the legislature as representing the sovereignty of the state,<sup>50</sup> it necessarily follows that the power to authorize the laying out of a road exists only where it has clearly been conferred by legislative enactment,<sup>51</sup> conforming to the limitations imposed by the constitution on the lawmaking power,<sup>52</sup> and then only under the circumstances and conditions prescribed by the enactment.<sup>53</sup> In other words, the landowner's evidence showed only plans to build a home on eleven and one half acres without any showing of plans to cultivate land, landowner was not entitled to cartway.—Brown v. Glass, 50 S.E.2d 918, 229 N.C. 657.

Property subject to jurisdiction

Since the landed estates of non-residents are subject to the police power of the state both for favorable and unfavorable action, such property is subject to the jurisdiction of the state courts relative to the establishment of a road of public easement for the benefit thereof.—Holland-Washington Mortgage Co. v. County Court of Hood River County, 188 P. 199, 95 Or. 668.

In Missouri

(1) The authority to establish a private road as a way of necessity comprehends judicial, not ministerial action by a county court.—Rippeto v. Thompson, 216 S.W.2d 505, 358 Mo. 721.

(2) Where county court previously had power under statute to establish a private road of necessity but new constitution did not vest judicial power in county court, county court thereafter did not have jurisdiction in such proceedings.—Rippeto v. Thompson, supra.

(3) Circuit court does not have common-law jurisdiction to establish a private way of necessity, and statute giving circuit court jurisdiction to establish private roads of necessity had no retroactive effect.—Rippeto v. Thompson, supra.

(4) Where landowner instituted proceeding in county court for private way of necessity, after new constitution divesting county court of judicial power had become effective, and proceeding was appealed to circuit court prior to enactment of statute giving circuit courts jurisdiction to establish private roads in place of county court, neither court had jurisdiction over proceeding and judgment establishing private road was invalid.—Rippeto v. Thompson, supra.

58. In Georgia

(1) Private ways may be established by the law by the ordinary on application.—Porter v. Foster, 90 S.E. 967, 146 Ga. 154—Atlantic Coast Line Ry. Co. v. Sweatman, 58 S.E.2d 553, 81 Ga.App. 269.

(2) The county judge of Richmond County, under the act of 1871, creating county courts in several counties, including Richmond, and declaring that the judges thereof shall discharge the duties formerly devolving on the justices of the inferior courts as to county business, has jurisdiction to grant private roads.—Summerville Macadamized, etc., Road Co. v. Deutscher Schuetzen Club, 62 Ga. 318.

(3) The question for the determination of the county judge is whether or not a necessity for the private road exists, and the questions as to the persons who will be entitled to use the road when it is granted and as to the compensation to be paid therefor are not for the county judge to determine.—Summerville Macadamized, etc., Road Co. v. Deutscher Schuetzen Club, supra.

(2) Where statute provided that proceedings to establish cartways over land of others in Haywood

Construction and operation of statutes. Since statutes which authorize the laying out of private roads involving the appropriation of private property against the will of the owner are in derogation of the common law and common right,<sup>61</sup> they are not favored statutes,<sup>62</sup> and must be strictly construed,<sup>63</sup> especially where the proposed road is solely for the benefit of the person asking that it be laid out.<sup>64</sup> However, such statutes are not to be so strictly construed as not to allow any deviation from the literal words thereof under any condition,<sup>65</sup> but they should be construed with sufficient liberality to effect their "beneficent purpose."<sup>66</sup>

§ 5. — Convenience or Necessity

As a general rule land can be taken for private roads only in cases of necessity.

County should be commenced before the board of county commissioners, and general statutes subsequently enacted but without repealing clause provided that proceedings to establish cartways over lands of others should be commenced before the clerk, public local law remained in full force and must be treated as an exception to the public law.—Rogers v. Davis, 192 S.E. 872, 212 N.C. 35.

(3) Where proceeding was instituted under general law to establish cartway over land of others before clerk, instead of being instituted in accordance with the public local law which provided that such proceedings in Haywood county should be commenced before the board of county commissioners, clerk was without jurisdiction to act on the petition.—*Rogers v. The word "necessary" is not to be read as though meaning absolutely necessary, but contemplates practical necessity, and, if applicant's outlet to highway or his own ground or the way he now has does not afford him practical access to the highway, and cannot be made to do so at a reasonable expense, then he is entitled to the establishment of the the statutes authorizes the opening of roads merely because they will be convenient<sup>72</sup> or save expense.<sup>73</sup>

Where there is in existence a practicable way to and from the land,<sup>74</sup> whether public<sup>75</sup> or private,<sup>76</sup> a case of necessity does not arise, even though such way may be less convenient<sup>77</sup> or practicable<sup>78</sup> than the one proposed. However, this rule necessarily implies that applicant's existing way must be one which is reasonably practicable and sufficient for that purpose.<sup>79</sup> Thus, unless a person has a way either public or private which is unobstructed and unquestioned, he may institute proceedings under the statutes<sup>80</sup> which, it has been said, do not contemplate that the owner who claims to have no way to his land should be compelled to institute suits to determine whether he has such a way before inviting the aid of the statutes.<sup>81</sup> Accordingly, although there is authority to the contrary,<sup>82</sup> it has been held that the mere premissive use of a private way over the lands of others does not affect applicant's right to a private road,<sup>83</sup> unless he has acquired a legal and enforceable easement.<sup>84</sup> So, also, it has been

way as a necessity.—Peery v. Hill, 120 S.W.2d 762, 275 Ky. 105—Vice v. Eden, 68 S.W. 125, 113 Ky. 255.

Rule applied to public service corporations

The rule requiring necessity for the condemnation of a way of necessity over adjoining owner's land should be more strict between private owners who are strangers in title than between public service corporations who are in law representing a necessity common to the whole public.—State v. Superior Court for Kitsap County, 181 P. 689, 107 Wash. 228.

Inconvenience and hardship

The fact that without the road applicant will be subjected to great inconvenience and hardship furnishes no ground for granting it.—Martin v. Patin, 16 La. 55.

Cost prohibitive

(1) A proposed private road was properly established on ground of necessity over defendant's land, notwithstanding petitioner would have ingress and egress if a road were established on his land, where a road thus located would cross a slough and require a bridge, and cost of required drainage and filling would be prohibitive.—Roth v. Dale, 177 S.W. 2d 179, 206 Ark. 735.

No adequate or convenient outlet

(1) Landowner, in order to condemn right of way across intervening land to public road, need not show that he has no outlet, but only that he has no adequate and convenient one.—Brady v. Correll, 97 S.W. 2d 448, 20 Tenn.App. 224.

(2) Existence of private right of way by grant will not prevent the owner of such way from obtaining a way by condemnation if the private way is not an adequate and convenient outlet to a public road.—Debusk v. Riley, 289 S.W. 493, 154 Tenn. 381.

(3) Landowner was not precluded from condemning right of way across intervening land to public road because he could reach his land by crossing river by boat or ferry, since crossing by boat or ferry with machinery and products of land would not be adequate and convenient.—Brady v. Correll, supra.

Co. v. Philpot, supra.

Permissive way reasonable and adequate

If available permissive way is reasonable and adequate as a proper means of access, petition for a cartway over adjoining private lands should be denied.—Garris v. Byrd, 49 S.E.2d 625, 229 N.C. 343—Warlick v. Lowman, 9 S.E. 458, 103 N.C. 122.

Permissive way insufficient

Where the permissive nature of the way renders it insufficient to meet the requirement of other adequate means of transportation, within the meaning of the statute, the relief should be granted.—Garris v. Byrd, 49 S.E.2d 625, 229 N.C. 343.

84. Ark.—St. Louis-San Francisco held that the right to institute proceedings is not affected by the fact that applicant for the road might have purchased another way giving him access to the highway over the lands of some third person,<sup>85</sup> or by the fact that a deed to property grants a right of way to continue until the grantee shall procure a private or public road direct to the land granted from his own premises,<sup>86</sup> or by the fact that applicant already has a lease for the right of way sought to be condemned.<sup>87</sup>

Determination of necessity. In determining whether there is a necessity for a private road, it is necessary to take into consideration the entire situation.<sup>88</sup> It has been stated that it is impossible to fix the dividing line between necessity and inconvenience,<sup>89</sup> and that every case must, to a large extent, depend on its own facts.<sup>90</sup> It has also been held that, in determining whether a road is necessary, the court must take into consideration not only the convenience and benefit it will be to the limited number of people it serves,<sup>91</sup> but also the injury and inconvenience which it will occasion to the owner of the land over which the proposed road is to be laid out.<sup>92</sup>

§ 6. — Proceedings in General

- a. Nature
- b. Right to institute

a. Nature

The statutory proceeding for the establishment of a private road is one having for its object the taking of the property of one person for the private use of another, and is, therefore, in invitum in derogation of the common law and of common right.

The statutory proceeding for the establishment of a private road is one having for its object the taking of the property of one person for the private use of another, and is, therefore, in invitum in derogation of the common law and of common right.<sup>93</sup> It is in the nature of a civil action strictly between petitioner and the owner or owners through whose land the road is to pass, the public at large having no interest therein.<sup>94</sup>

Burden of proof

One seeking to establish a private way over lands of another must prove that it is a way of necessity.—Welch v. Shipman, 210 S.W.2d 1008, 357 Mo. 838.

Necessity held shown

(1) In general.

Ark.—Parrott v. Fullerton, 193 S.W. 2d 654, 209 Ark. 1018—Roth v. Dale, 177 S.W.2d 179, 206 Ark. 735.

Mich.—Leighton v. Elysium Hunting & Fishing Club, 27 N.W.2d 676, 318 Mich. 146.

(2) In proceeding to condemn a passway over five-foot strip of land lying between highway and applicant's residence, where it was possible at great expense and at some hazard to user to construct a passway a fifth of a mile long whereby applicant might reach public highway over his own property, and where it appeared that the taking of the property would do no appreciable damage to the landowner, practical necessity of passway sought to be condemned was established, and warranted taking of the land.—Peery v. Hill, 120 S.W.2d 762, 275 Ky. 105.

Sufficient reason held not shown for setting aside jury's verdict as to necessity

Mich.—Leighton v. Elysium Hunting & Fishing Club, 27 N.W.2d 676, 318 Mich. 146.

Hazardous grade crossing

(1) Where the necessity exists, the fact that the private road will cross the main railroad track and two industrial tracks and that cars while standing on the industrial tracks may tend to some extent to obscure the view of travelers on the road, will not make the crossing so dangerous as to authorize a court to hold that the road should not be established.—Black Mountain Corporation v. Appleman, 33 S.W.2d 327, 236 Ky. 510.

(2) Where a landowner had an implied right to pass over lands of others to public roads, and these passways were not attended with any inconvenience except that they approached the rear of his residence, it was held that there was no practical necessity for opening the proposed passway across a railroad right of way, although the distance of travel saved by the new road would be about four hundred feet.—Louisville, etc., R. Co. v. Geoghagan, 261 S.W. 1104, 203 Ky. 198.

(3) Where lot separated from highway by railroad right of way was only one hundred seventy yards from a public crossing and easement over adjoining land to crossing could be made serviceable the year around at less expense than construction of private road and crossing to provide direct access to highway, reasonable necessity for establishment of private road and crossing was not shown, in view of increased hazard to railroad and public which an additional crossing would entail.—St. Louis-San Francisco Ry. Co. v. Logue, 224 S.W.2d 42, 216 Ark. 64.

94. Mo.—State ex rel. Palmer v. Elliot, 58 S.W.2d 283, 332 Mo. 229 —Allen v. Welch, 102 S.W. 665, 125 Mo. App. 278.

b. Right to Institute

The statute authorizing the establishment of a private road determines who may institute proceedings therefor.

The statute authorizing the establishment of a private road determines who may institute proceedings therefor,<sup>95</sup> as where it provides that petitioner must live<sup>96</sup> or be settled<sup>97</sup> on the land over which the private road is desired, or where it provides that petitioner must be either a resident who occupies or a nonresident who owns cultivated land which such road will connect with the public highway.<sup>98</sup> It is not absolutely necessary, in order to have the right to petition, that petitioner be the actual owner of the premises,<sup>99</sup> but it is sufficient that he is in possession of the land as owner<sup>1</sup> or that he has either control or an interest in it.<sup>2</sup>

Several owners. Under a statute providing for the laying out of roads for private and public use from a lot of land to a public road, several owners of one lot are entitled to petition for the laying out of a road from such lot to a public road.<sup>3</sup> However, such statute includes merely the laying out of the road on the petition of the owner or owners of one lot, and does not authorize the laying out of a road from a public road to one lot of land and from thence to other lots, on a petition joined in by their owners.<sup>4</sup> On the other hand, under other statutes, it has been held that several owners of separate tracts of land may petition for a private road.<sup>5</sup>

A corporation may condemn land for a private way of necessity where, under like conditions, natural persons may do so.<sup>6</sup>

Abandonment of prior proceeding. The fact that a landowner has already instituted, but abandoned, a proceeding for a road which would have given him the desired access to a parcel of land does not estop him to institute a proceeding for a different road to such parcel, if, on the first application, no road was actually established.<sup>7</sup>

Transferee of part of land after trial in county court. Since in a proceeding to establish a private road, rights of a third person to whom part of the land is transferred after trial of the case in the county court, are not adjudicated, as discussed infra § 13, such person may institute proceedings to establish a private road, if he does not have access to buildings located on the property transferred to him.<sup>8</sup>

Estoppel. Where one opens a road over his own land to a highway and afterward by deeds, without reservation of the road, conveys the lots nearest the highway to others who close the road, he is not estopped to institute a statutory proceeding to lay out such road as a private road.<sup>9</sup>

Time for instituting. A person who desires to lay out a private road to his lands, and who has already a right of way to them, is not bound to wait until his right of way expires before he brings a proceeding to lay out a private way,<sup>10</sup> but he may move a reasonable time in advance of the expiration of the existing easement, and need not wait until he has no way at all.<sup>11</sup>

Although the owner of the land for whose benefit a private road is requested is a proper party plaintiff in an action to establish the road,<sup>12</sup> it has been held that all persons having an interest in the land may join in the action as parties plaintiff.<sup>13</sup> Accordingly, where remaindermen are in possession of land and the life tenant is not, the life tenant and remainderman may properly join as parties plaintiff in a proceeding to condemn a passway over lands of others to a public road.<sup>14</sup>

While the owners of the lands over which a private road is asked are necessary parties defendant to the proceeding,<sup>15</sup> it is not requisite that the owner of inclosed land join as defendants all owners of land which incloses his.<sup>16</sup> Where it is sought to establish the road across the land of a decedent, the heirs or devisees should be made parties defendant.<sup>17</sup> Where a road is sought to be established over lands parallel to a division fence, which becomes the boundary of the road on one side, the adjoining owner is not a necessary party to the proceedings<sup>18</sup> and cannot be heard to object where no part of his land or interest in the division fence is taken or damaged.<sup>19</sup>

b. Petition

(1) In general

(2) Requisites

(1) In General

The proceedings are generally required by statute to be commenced by petition. Notice of an intended petition may be required.

The proceedings are generally required by statute to be commenced by petition.<sup>20</sup>

In the absence of any statutory requirement to that effect, it has been held that no notice of an intended petition for the laying out of a road need be given to the person over whose land the road is sought to be laid out,<sup>21</sup> but it will be sufficient if he has subsequent notice and is afforded an opportunity at some stage of the proceedings to be heard on the question of compensation for his land sought to be appropriated.<sup>22</sup> On the other hand, if the statute requires such notice, the giving thereof is jurisdictional,<sup>23</sup> and the notice is analogous to a summons in an ordinary civil action.<sup>24</sup>

If the statute providing for notice does not prescribe the method of service, personal service is indispensable,<sup>25</sup> and service made in any other manner will not constitute legal service,<sup>26</sup> even though it in fact accomplishes the purpose of notifying the landowner.<sup>27</sup> Where the statute provides for service on the owner, unless he resides out of the county, in which case notice shall be given by publication, service on the agent of a foreign railroad corporation in charge of its depot and place of business in the county is sufficient.<sup>28</sup>

The giving of the notice is not an act relating to the subject matter of the proceeding,<sup>29</sup> and the landowner by a general appearance subjects himself to the jurisdiction of the tribunal to which the petition is presented.<sup>30</sup>

(2) Requisites

The petition must contain a statement of all the facts which, by statute, are made necessary to entitle the petitioner to the relief prayed.

cient.<sup>32</sup> The petition is not required to be so formal and precise as ordinary pleadings,<sup>33</sup> and will be upheld if it contains enough to show with reasonable certainty the jurisdictional facts.<sup>34</sup> Likewise, where the statute expressly designates what facts shall be set forth, it is not essential to set out any other facts than those so designated.<sup>35</sup>

No other or greater number of signatures to the petition than prescribed by statute is necessary.<sup>36</sup>

Necessity. Where the right to a private road is limited by constitution and statute to cases of necessity, as discussed supra § 5, it is indispensable that a petition should allege the necessity for the road.<sup>37</sup> Where the petition fails to show this fact, it is demurrable,<sup>38</sup> and the court acquires no jurisdiction to proceed.<sup>39</sup> With respect to the sufficiency of the allegation of necessity, the petition may either follow the language of the statute or constitution, as the case may be,<sup>40</sup> or allege facts which show the necessity of the proposed road with reasonable certainty.<sup>41</sup>

Person to be benefited. The petition should state, in terms and truly, the person for whose benefit the projected road is to be,<sup>42</sup> and show that petitioner is one of the class of persons for whom the road may be laid out.<sup>43</sup>

the statute authorizes.<sup>44</sup> It must describe with reasonable certainty the route desired,<sup>45</sup> although it has been held that it need not set out the points of beginning and termination and the courses and distances with the exactness necessary in a petition for a public road.<sup>46</sup> The termini must be described with reasonable certainty;<sup>47</sup> otherwise the petition will be insufficient to give jurisdiction,<sup>48</sup> and an order for the opening of the road on such petition cannot be sustained.<sup>49</sup> Where, however, the termini of the road are described with reasonable certainty, this will be sufficient.<sup>50</sup>

Waiver of objections. Defects in the petition consisting merely of informalities of statement must be deemed waived, when raised for the first time after the jury have been impaneled.<sup>51</sup> If it can be considered a valid objection to the petition that it was not sworn to, proceeding to trial without raising the objection constitutes a waiver thereof.<sup>52</sup>

c. Bond

Where a statute so requires, a bond must be filed with the petition in order to invest the tribunal with jurisdiction to act on the petition.

Some statutes require that a bond be filed with the petition in order to invest the tribunal with jurisdiction to act on the petition.<sup>53</sup> If the bond does not substantially comply with such statutes, no jurisdiction of the proceedings is acquired,<sup>54</sup> and a defect in the bond cannot, at a late stage in the

§ 8. — Commissioners, Viewers, Jurors, Surveyors, and Like Officers

- a. In general
- b. Appointment, qualification, and eligibility
- c. Acts and proceedings
- d. Report
- e. Return of report and proceedings thereon

a. In General

On the filing of a petition for the establishment of a private road, the statutes generally provide for the appointment of commissioners, viewers, a jury, or the like to view the proposed road and determine matters relating to its establishment.

While under most statutes when a petition is presented to the court or tribunal for the establishment of a private road, provision is made for the appointment of commissioners, viewers, or the like to view the proposed road and determine matters relating to its establishment,<sup>58</sup> under some statutes these matters are for a jury.<sup>59</sup> Under a statute providing that one of the viewers appointed shall be a surveyor, it is not necessary that the court should appoint a county surveyor.<sup>60</sup>

b. Appointment, Qualification, and Eligibility

- (1) In general
- (2) Notice of application for appointment
- (3) Answer
- (4) Order of appointment

(1) In General

It is not necessary or proper that the court should find the proposed road a necessity as a preliminary for appointing commissioners. The commissioners must take the oath prescribed by statute and must be disinterested.

It is not essential that the court should find the proposed road a necessity as a preliminary for appointing commissioners.<sup>61</sup> On the contrary, the only questions for determination are whether the petition shows facts which under the statute entitle applicant to have commissioners appointed,<sup>62</sup> and who shall be appointed commissioners.<sup>63</sup> Accordingly, where a prima facie showing of necessity is made by applicant who seeks to establish a private road, the court has no right to proceed to try that issue,<sup>64</sup> but should appoint commissioners,<sup>65</sup> who, after going on and investigating the premises, make their recommendations in the form of a report to be disposed of thereafter on exceptions filed by the litigant who is dissatisfied with it.<sup>66</sup> It is no objection to the appointment of a committee that a committee has been previously appointed on the same petition, and has made a report which had been set aside,<sup>67</sup> and statutes making it necessary to pay compensation to the owner of the land over which the road is to be laid out before it is opened do not make such payment a prerequisite to the appointment of commissioners to lay out the road.<sup>68</sup>

Qualification. After appointment by the court, the commissioners are sworn to discharge their duties faithfully and impartially.<sup>69</sup> Accordingly, if a county surveyor is appointed, it is as essential for him to take the oath as it is for the others,<sup>70</sup> and his failure to do so nullifies the entire proceedings.<sup>71</sup> In some jurisdictions the oaths of jurors need not be reduced to writing<sup>72</sup> or shown by the record.<sup>73</sup>

Means of enforcement of order of clerk

Where order of clerk fixes right of petitioner to a way of ingress to, and egress from, petitioner's land over defendant's land to state highway, appointment of jury of view to locate, lay out, and mark the bounds of the easement thus established is the mechanics, in the nature of an execution, provided for the enforcement of the order.—Triplett v. 73. Tex.—Galveston, etc., R. Co. v. Baudat, supra.

Eligibility. The statutes generally provide that a member of a tribunal laying out a road shall be disinterested.<sup>74</sup> Accordingly sons or nephews of petitioner are disqualified to act.<sup>75</sup> However, a person is not disqualified to act by having served in previous ineffectual proceedings taken by the same person to obtain another right of way to the same land.<sup>76</sup>

Objections to the commissioners on the ground of disqualification may be waived,<sup>77</sup> as where there is a failure to make timely objection.<sup>78</sup>

(2) Notice of Application for Appointment

In the absence of a waiver, there must be a compliance with statutory requirements that notice be given to the owners of the land, over which the proposed road is to be laid out, of the time when and place where the application for the appointment of viewers will be made.

There must be a compliance with statutory requirements that notice be given to the owners of the land, over which the proposed road is to be laid out, of the time when and place where the application for appointment of viewers will be made,<sup>79</sup> unless the requirement is waived.<sup>80</sup> Accordingly, one who participated in the selection of viewers or commissioners,<sup>81</sup> or was present at the hearing before the ordinary and made no objection to the appointment,<sup>82</sup> or failed to raise the issue of want of notice by an exception to the report,<sup>83</sup> or delayed in making the objection until the report was filed,<sup>84</sup> waives any want of notice of the intended application.

(3) Answer

In jurisdictions where no hearing is had before the commissioners, an answer to the application for the appointment of commissioners is not necessary or proper and does not make an issue.

In jurisdictions where no hearing is had before the commissioners, as discussed infra subdivision

c (2) of this section, an answer to the application for the appointment of commissioners is not necessary,<sup>85</sup> is not proper,<sup>86</sup> does not make an issue,<sup>87</sup> and may be rejected,<sup>88</sup> or, if filed, it may be disregarded,<sup>89</sup> since the only issues are those presented by the commissioner's report and exceptions there-to.<sup>90</sup>

(4) Order of Appointment

The order appointing viewers must recite the jurisdictional facts and should specify the character of notice to be given.

The order appointing viewers must recite the jurisdictional facts,<sup>91</sup> and whenever it fails so to do the proceeding should be dismissed without prejudice.<sup>92</sup> Where petitioner does not apply for a particular route, the commissioners should be directed to report the one they consider most practical and convenient,<sup>93</sup> and the order should specify the character of notice to be given.<sup>94</sup> However, notice of the order making the appointment is waived by appearing in court and contesting on the merits a proceeding to locate the road<sup>95</sup> or by failing to raise the issue of want of notice by an exception to the report.<sup>96</sup>

Seal. When so provided by statute, the order must be under the seal of the court,<sup>97</sup> and its omission is a defect and not a mere informality;<sup>98</sup> and the order is void when the seal is not attached until after the report of the viewers is filed.<sup>99</sup> The court has no power to supply the omission of the seal on the return of the order and report.<sup>1</sup> Where, however, an order to view on a petition to lay out a private road is correctly captioned as being in the court of quarter sessions, and is signed by the clerk thereof, who is also the clerk of the orphans' court, but the seal of the orphans' court is erroneously affixed to the order in lieu of the seal of the court of quarter sessions, the record may be amended by substituting the correct seal.<sup>2</sup>

c. Acts and Proceedings

- (1) In general
- (2) Hearing

(1) In General

Statutes providing for the appointment of commissioners and viewers create a special tribunal to determine the necessity and location of a proposed private road and also the amount of damages to be paid to the landowner over whose land the road is to pass.

A statute providing for the appointment of viewers on a petition for a private road has been held to create a tribunal for a special purpose,<sup>3</sup> and to endow it with an authority that no court has the right to destroy.<sup>4</sup> Under such statute, the necessity for the road,<sup>5</sup> its location,<sup>6</sup> and the amount of damages<sup>7</sup> are exclusively within the jurisdiction of the viewers whose decision on such matters is not subject to review by the trial court,<sup>8</sup> although their actions are subject to review by the trial court, in the same manner as the actions of the trial court are subject to review by appellate courts.<sup>9</sup> Accordingly, although the trial court must accept the determination of the viewers as to the question of necessity,<sup>10</sup> inquiry into the regularity of road proceedings is not precluded,<sup>11</sup> and, if the viewers acted dishonestly or corruptly, their conduct may be inquired into and their action set aside.<sup>12</sup>

If the viewers agree that there is a necessity for a road, they should proceed to lay out the proposed road<sup>13</sup> in such a manner as will do the least injury to private property,<sup>14</sup> and, also, as far as practicable, as will be agreeable to the desire of petitioner.<sup>15</sup> In determining the route to be followed by a private road, the viewers should naturally consult petitioner,<sup>16</sup> and their adoption of the route proposed by him is no possible indication of partiality or bias on their part.<sup>17</sup>

On the other hand, in some jurisdictions, although the laying off of the private road,<sup>18</sup> and the question of damages,<sup>19</sup> are for the jury of view, their findings are subject to review by the trial court.<sup>20</sup>

(2) Hearing

Although under some statutes no hearing is afforded to the parties except by way of exceptions to the report of the commissioners, under other statutes a hearing may be had before the commissioners or viewers on the issue of the necessity of the proposed road.

Although under some statutes no hearing is afforded to the parties<sup>21</sup> except by way of exceptions to the report of the commissioners, as discussed infra subdivision e (3) of this section, other statutes provide for a hearing before the commissioners or viewers,<sup>22</sup> on the issue of the necessity of the proposed road.<sup>23</sup>

Notice. Personal notice must be given to the owner or owners of the land, over which the proposed road is to pass, of the time and place of the meeting of the viewers, in order to determine the question as to the necessity of such road.<sup>24</sup> However, the objection of want of sufficient notice is waived where the owner has appeared at the hearing and contested on the merits,<sup>25</sup> or has appeared and put in his claim for damages and has had as full opportunity to be heard as though a valid notice had been given.<sup>26</sup>

d. Report

A report of the viewers of their proceedings is necessary to the proper establishment of a private road. It should substantially conform to the petition and order of appointment and contain a statement of all the facts necessary to entitle the applicant to the road.

A report of the viewers of their proceedings is necessary to the proper establishment of a private road.<sup>27</sup> The report should substantially conform to the petition and order of appointment,<sup>28</sup> and contain a statement of all the facts necessary to entitle applicant to the road.<sup>29</sup>

It is not necessary for the committee to direct in its report the particular kind of fences which petitioners shall build in the places designated for that purpose, where the law furnishes a sufficient guide on the subject.<sup>30</sup>

A declaration in the report, in direct contravention of the statute, that the road shall remain such as long as the petitioner shall keep it in repair, and no longer, invalidates the whole proceeding;<sup>31</sup> and the fact that the selectmen did not intend to annex such a condition, having taken the clause containing it from a book of forms, does not justify the court in permitting them to amend their report by striking out the clause so as to validate their proceedings.<sup>32</sup>

Description. The report must describe the road by metes and bounds, courses and distances,<sup>33</sup> and fix the width of the road as a basis for the computation of damages,<sup>34</sup> unless the statute under which the proceeding was instituted itself provides that the road shall be of a given width, and does not expressly require it to be specified in the report.<sup>35</sup> Likewise, the report must fix and designate the termini of the private road with the precision required by the statute.<sup>36</sup> Thus the terminal points of the road as contained in the report of viewers must correspond with those stated in the petition and order;<sup>37</sup> but it is sufficient if there is substantial conformity in this particular.<sup>38</sup> The report will be sustained against the objection that it fails to fix the termini of the road, if the report<sup>39</sup> or a draft which by the statute is made an essential part of the report,<sup>40</sup> locates the termini with reasonable certainty, since mathematical precision is not required.

Necessity of road. The report of the commissioners must contain a statement as to the necessity of the proposed road;<sup>41</sup> otherwise the report will be fatally defective.<sup>42</sup> It has been held, however, that it will be sufficient to state generally that there is "occasion for the road,"<sup>43</sup> or to make a report that the road is for private use.<sup>44</sup>

Notice of view to landowner. A report of viewers must show personal notice to the owner of the land, over which it is proposed to lay out a road, of the time and place of view.<sup>45</sup>

Certifying regard had to public convenience. Where a private road laid out under the statute is not a road strictly for private use, but is open to the use of the public, a failure to certify that in the laying out of the road regard was had to the public convenience is fatal to the validity of the report.<sup>46</sup>

Damages. The commissioners must find and report the damages to which the owner of the property over which the road is to be laid is entitled.<sup>47</sup>

Waiver of defects. A petitioner cannot object to the report of the committee appointed to hear the application on the ground that such report contains irrelevant findings of fact, if he made no ob-

a. Return of Report and Proceedings Thereon

- (1) In general
- (2) Amendments
- (3) Objections and exceptions
- (4) Confirmation

(1) In General

The report of proceedings to establish a private road must be made and filed within the time provided by statute, the usual requirement being that the report shall be made to the next term of court after the appointment of the viewers.

The report of proceedings to establish a private road must be made and filed within the time provided by statute,<sup>49</sup> and the usual requirement is that the report shall be made to the next term of court after the appointment of the viewers,<sup>50</sup> in order to allow time for filing exceptions to the report, if necessary.<sup>51</sup> Accordingly, it has been held that it is not proper for viewers to assemble on the ground, assess the damages, and make their report to the court on the day on which they were appointed,<sup>52</sup> and for the court on the next day to confirm the report absolutely.<sup>53</sup>

Subsequent views. Some statutes make provision for a petition for a review.<sup>54</sup> Where a petition for a review is filed to the report of viewers appointed by the court to lay out a private road, petitioner is estopped, by his act in requesting the review, to question the regularity of the original petition and the report thereon.<sup>55</sup> If the original petition and report of viewers are irregular in any way, the landowner's remedy is by proceedings to set them aside, rather than to file exceptions which do not cover any of the necessary facts which will justify the court in dismissing the petition or setting aside the report.<sup>56</sup>

(2) Amendments

Although the court may have no power to alter the report, a mere clerical error in the report is amendable.

Although, the court may have no power to alter the report, where its power is limited to a rejection or confirmation of the report,<sup>57</sup> a mere clerical error in the report is amendable.<sup>58</sup> If an amendment is desired, the proper remedy is an application for the recommitment of the report to the viewers for correction,<sup>59</sup> although it has been held that the action of the court in accepting an amended report may be regarded as an equivalent of its having been recommitted to the viewers for correction.<sup>60</sup>

(3) Objections and Exceptions

Under some statutes, if the owner of the land over which the road is proposed to be laid out desires to resist the application, he may do so by filing exceptions to the commissioners' report.

Under some statutes, if the owner of the land over which the road is proposed to be laid out desires to resist the application, he may do so by filing exceptions to the commissioners' report.<sup>61</sup> The purpose of the exceptions to the commissioners' report is to challenge the finding,<sup>62</sup> and to obtain a review as by an appeal.<sup>63</sup> Accordingly, if an issue is made on a particular item, or for a particular cause, by exceptions, the effect is to vacate the commissioners' award.<sup>64</sup>

An owner's motion to dismiss proceedings for a road over his land on the ground that he had not been served with notice, made only two days after the report was filed, is prematurely made, where it does not appear that it was not the intention of the parties to give the notice.<sup>65</sup>

Effect on parties not filing exceptions

A report of commissioners as to value of land taken for road and damages for taking thereof is not binding on litigant filing no exceptions thereto, where one of parties excepts to confirmation of report and assigns grounds for exception, thereby raising an issue.—Skidmore v. Mitchell, 188 S.W.2d 434, 300 Ky. 255.

65. Ky.—Martin v. Morgan, 221 S.W. 523, 188 Ky. 122.

Defenses. The owners of the land over which the proposed road is to be laid out may, by exception to the report, present any defenses which they may have,<sup>66</sup> and such defenses as they do not embody in the exceptions to the report are conclusively deemed to be waived.<sup>67</sup> So, also, objections which should have been raised at an earlier stage of the proceedings are not available by way of exceptions to the report.<sup>68</sup> It is sufficient ground to sustain exceptions to the report that the road is located across a railroad at grade and that the use of it would imperil life, limb, and property.<sup>69</sup>

Pleadings. The report, it has been said, serves much the same purpose as a petition in an ordinary equitable action.<sup>70</sup> The pleadings are deemed sufficient if they are of such a character as clearly to show the questions arising and give both parties an opportunity to defend their rights.<sup>71</sup> The allegations made in the exceptions need not be traversed as in case of a pleading.<sup>72</sup>

Evidence. The burden of proof is on the exceptor to sustain the exceptions to the commissioners' report.<sup>73</sup> On proper exceptions to the commissioner's report, the owner of the land may show that the proposed road is not the most practical and convenient way over the land and, by such showing, defeat the establishment of the particular route proposed.<sup>74</sup> Evidence that there had been travel over the route of the proposed road until a well defined road was worn is competent as reflecting the conditions of the land as to its value.<sup>75</sup> The fact that petitioner has secured another way for his own use is relevant on the question of the necessity of a proposed private road;<sup>76</sup> and, like other facts, may be established by testimony as to what applicant himself has said on the subject.<sup>77</sup>

Expert testimony has been held admissible on the question of the necessity of a road.<sup>78</sup>

Trial. Under some statutes on exceptions to the report of the commissioners, the proceedings are tried de novo,<sup>79</sup> and are conducted in general conformity with the proceedings in ordinary nisi prius trials.<sup>80</sup> The trial de novo opens up the whole case for trial on its merits, or at least with respect to the issue made.<sup>81</sup> Unless the parties agree that the court may try the case, the court must cause a jury to be impaneled to try the issues made by the exceptions.<sup>82</sup> The verdict of the jury, however, is not conclusive on the court,<sup>83</sup> but is only advisory,<sup>84</sup> and, on the report of the commissioners, the verdict, and other evidence, the court must determine whether the private road shall be established.<sup>85</sup> Accordingly, if sufficient grounds are not shown for setting aside the verdict of the jury, the court will render judgment in conformity therewith.<sup>86</sup>

(4) Confirmation

When the report of the commissioners is returned to the court, it must proceed to establish the road or refuse it, and, if the court finds that the report is in conformity with law, it will confirm the report. Where a statute so requires, notice of the report must be given.

When the report of the commissioners is returned to the court, it must proceed to establish the road or refuse it.<sup>87</sup> In the absence of objections or exceptions, the report of the commissioners is binding on the court,<sup>88</sup> and, if the court finds that the report is in conformity with law, it will confirm it.<sup>89</sup> Accordingly, if the report is favorable to the proposed road, it may be established and recorded.<sup>90</sup>

89. Ky.—Black Mountain Corpora-

No confirmation nisi of a report is necessary where at the term to which the report is made a review was awarded, the effect of which was to suspend any judgment on the report.<sup>91</sup>

Notice of report. There must be a compliance with statutory provisions as to notice of the report of the commissioners.<sup>92</sup> Under some statutes, on the filing of the commissioners' report, the clerk of court must issue process against the owners of the land to show cause why the report should not be confirmed,<sup>93</sup> and a judgment establishing the road is a nullity if there is not a compliance with the statutory requirement,<sup>94</sup> unless the owner renders such notice unnecessary by entry and appearance at the proceedings.<sup>95</sup>

Order of confirmation. A confirmation of a report is in effect an order that the road be opened;<sup>96</sup> but confirmation of a report nunc pro tunc followed by a simultaneous final confirmation and issue of the order to open the road does not cure previous informal and unauthorized proceedings.<sup>97</sup> Under some statutes the decree of confirmation is final,<sup>98</sup> subject to review in the proper manner,<sup>99</sup> and the road opened thereunder can be abolished only in the manner prescribed by statute.<sup>1</sup>

Where the width of a road is fixed during the same term at which the decree of confirmation nisi of a report of viewers laying out a private road is made, it is sufficient, although omitted in the decree itself,<sup>2</sup> and where, if more than one term passes before final confirmation, and another term thereafter elapses before any exceptions are filed, the road is duly granted, it is error to vacate the decree of confirmation and set aside the proceedings.<sup>3</sup>

Waiver of defects in the order of confirmation, as far as the landowner is concerned, results from his proceeding by petition to recover the damages assessed in the proceeding.<sup>4</sup>

§ 9. — Order, Judgment, or Decree

- a. In general
- b. Conditions precedent

a. In General

The judgment establishing a private road must recite all the facts made essential by statute to the establishment of such a road.

The judgment establishing a private road must recite all the facts made essential by statute to the establishment of such a road.<sup>5</sup> Accordingly, the judgment, order, or decree should describe the location of the road granted;<sup>6</sup> but its failure to do so will not invalidate it where it referred to the description in the petition and report of the commissioners, both of which were part of the record.<sup>7</sup> The fact that the description of the location of the road contained in the order laying out the road does not follow the language of the application is not fatal to the proceeding, provided the description in the application is incorporated in the order by reference and the two descriptions are not irreconcilably repugnant.<sup>8</sup>

Termini. In ordering the laying out of a road it is the duty of the court, in its judgment, to fix both termini of such way.<sup>9</sup>

Width. Where the statute requires that the order of the court establishing the road shall define and specify its width, an omission so to do is fatal to the proceeding.<sup>10</sup> However, the court may, at a subsequent term, correct a mere mistake in fixing the width,<sup>11</sup> allowing another term to pass before confirming the report absolutely.<sup>12</sup> It is error to fix the width of the road in excess of that prescribed by statute.<sup>13</sup> Likewise, when the report estimates the damages for a road of a designated width, it is error to order the opening of a road of a greater width.<sup>14</sup> On the other hand, when the statute prescribes the width of the private road, there is no necessity, nor is there power, in the court to prescribe the width.<sup>15</sup>

Opening of road. If the statute provides that the court shall direct when the roads shall be laid out and when the damages shall be paid, the court must so direct in the decree establishing the road.<sup>16</sup> The order of confirmation need not specify how the road shall be opened, if the law authorizing the proceedings specifies the manner of opening the road in plain and direct terms.<sup>17</sup>

Manner of keeping in repair. It is not necessary for the court, in the order of confirmation, to specify how the road shall be kept in repair when the statute authorizing the proceeding provides that it shall be kept in repair by the persons applying for and using it.<sup>18</sup>

Limiting duration. Unless the statute expressly so provides, a tribunal establishing a road has no authority to limit in its decree the time for the use of the road to a given period of the year,<sup>19</sup> or to limit its duration to the necessity which required it.<sup>20</sup>

Negating existence of facts showing lack of jurisdiction. The order or decree of a court establishing a private road need not negative the existence of every fact which would show that the court could not properly exercise its power in the given case.<sup>21</sup>

Temporary judgment. Under some statutes the relief granted to the proprietor of an inclosed estate

must be of a permanent nature,<sup>22</sup> and a temporary judgment awarding a temporary private road is improper.<sup>23</sup>

Damages. The compensation to be paid must be fixed by a judicial decree.<sup>24</sup>

Entry. A mere verbal order for the opening of a road is ineffectual until entered of record.<sup>25</sup>

Nunc pro tunc entry may be resorted to to correct the judgment, order, or decree,<sup>26</sup> but, where no private road has been decreed, although the viewers so recommended, the court is without authority, on petition of the parties in interest, to enter a decree nunc pro tunc creating a private road in conformity with the viewers' recommendations.<sup>27</sup>

b. Conditions Precedent

Where a statute requires payment of damages for land taken for the opening of a private road before the opening thereof, it is error to issue an order for the opening of a road before the damages are paid or tendered and brought into court.

Where a statute requires payment of damages for land taken for the opening of a private road before the opening thereof, it is error to issue an order for the opening of a road before the damages are paid<sup>28</sup> or tendered and brought into court.<sup>29</sup> However, under a statute providing that, where no objections are taken to the commissioner's report, the court shall order the road established and enter judgment for the owners for the damages assessed, which the petitioner shall pay to the county treasurer, the court need not wait until the damages assessed have been actually paid by the petitioner to the county treasurer before rendering judgment establishing the way,<sup>30</sup> but may properly enter judgment awarding the damages assessed and adjudging the road established before such payment, although the part of the judgment establishing the road could not be enforced until the damages were in fact paid.<sup>31</sup> Likewise, in the absence of ex-

§ 10. — Laying Out or Opening Road

A road does not become a legal private road until the public functionaries whose ministerial duty it is so to do have actually laid it out.

A road does not become a legal private road until the public functionaries whose ministerial duty it is so to do have actually laid it out,<sup>33</sup> and the statutes contemplate the location of a permanent way and not the mere adoption of an existing temporary way.<sup>34</sup> The public functionaries whose ministerial duty it becomes to lay out a road have no discretion to change its location,<sup>35</sup> but must lay it out so as to cover ground substantially the same as that described in the application<sup>36</sup> and the order of the court.<sup>37</sup> Likewise, petitioner must construct the road in accordance with the description in the order of the court,<sup>38</sup> and the fact that parties and the viewers were mistaken in assuming that the proposed road ran through the landowner's property gives petitioner no right to construct the road at another location on the landowner's property arbitrarily selected by him.<sup>39</sup>

Injunction to restrain laying out of road. Where there is no other adequate remedy, injunction will lie to restrain the laying out of a road in accordance with an order made without any jurisdiction to make it.<sup>40</sup> So, also, injunction will lie to restrain petitioner from locating a road at a place not specified in the order of the court.<sup>41</sup>

§ 11. — Review

- a. Certiorari
- b. Appeal or error

a. Certiorari

- (1) In general
- (2) Proceedings for writ

- (3) Review and scope thereof
- (4) Determination and disposition

(1) In General

Certiorari will not lie to review proceedings to establish a private road where an adequate remedy by appeal exists.

In accordance with the general rule discussed in Certiorari § 39, certiorari will not lie to review proceedings to establish a private road where an adequate remedy by appeal or writ of error exists;<sup>42</sup> and, if a writ is improperly issued in such case, it should be dismissed.<sup>43</sup> Likewise certiorari will not lie to review a determination adverse to the establishment of the road, made by a tribunal in the exercise of its discretionary powers.<sup>44</sup> It may be discretionary with the court, to which application is made, to refuse the writ, where no transcript of the record is presented therewith, so as to enable the court to judge of the propriety of issuing the writ.<sup>45</sup>

(2) Proceedings for Writ

A writ of certiorari may be issued only to one who is a party to the proceedings to establish a private road, and only proper parties should be joined as defendants.

A writ of certiorari may be issued only to one who is a party to the proceedings to establish a private road.<sup>46</sup> One who becomes the owner of the land subsequent to the time of the view, but before issue of the final order, and presents a sufficient objection to the establishment of the road, is entitled, on a showing that he has lost his right of appeal, without fault or negligence on his part, to a writ of certiorari to review the proceedings.<sup>47</sup> After a road has been laid out and opened and the party through whose land it runs has proceeded by petition to recover damages therefor, he cannot, after an adverse award of viewers, sue out a certiorari to reverse the order of confirmation for any defect therein.<sup>48</sup> On a petition for certiorari to be directed to the county court relative to the establishment of a road, neither the county court as a judicial tribunal<sup>49</sup> nor the individuals composing it<sup>50</sup> are proper parties. Likewise, it is not necessary expressly to make the county a party where, by statute, it is made a defendant by operation of law.<sup>51</sup>

Application. In order to obtain certiorari, the party aggrieved by the establishment of a private road should present an application,<sup>52</sup> together with a duly certified transcript of the record sought to be reviewed.<sup>53</sup> A writ of certiorari should be entitled as between applicant therefor, as plaintiff in certiorari, and applicant for the road, as defendant.<sup>54</sup>

(3) Review and Scope Thereof

Certiorari in proceedings to establish a private road brings up only the record proper, and nothing is reviewable except the regularity of the proceedings.

In accordance with general rules discussed in Certiorari § 157, certiorari in proceedings to establish a private road brings up only the record proper,<sup>55</sup> and nothing is reviewable except the regularity of the proceedings.<sup>56</sup> The court will not hear evidence<sup>57</sup> or review questions of fact,<sup>58</sup> even though facts may be set forth in the opinion filed by the court below.<sup>59</sup> On questions of fact it must be presumed that the court below arrived at a correct conclusion.<sup>60</sup> Likewise, it will be taken for granted that every objection made to the report and overruled by the court below, which is in its nature capable of being proved, is untrue in point of fact unless the contrary appears from the record.<sup>61</sup>

On appeal from certiorari proceeding. Where an appeal may be and has been taken from the proceedings had on certiorari, in accordance with the general rules questions not raised in the court below will not be considered on an appeal taken to review the proceedings had on certiorari.<sup>62</sup>

(4) Determination and Disposition

Where the record shows that the court had jurisdiction, and that the proceedings were regular on their face, and there is no allegation or proof of abuse of discretion, the order of the lower court will be affirmed; otherwise the proceedings will be quashed, reversed, or remitted.

Where the record shows that the court had jurisdiction, and that the proceedings were regular on their face, and there is no allegation or proof of abuse of discretion, the order of the lower court will be affirmed.<sup>63</sup>

Quashing proceedings. The entire proceeding will be quashed where the petition failed to allege that petitioner had no access to his land other than by the proposed road,<sup>64</sup> or where it appears that there was no service of notice, as required by statute, on the owner<sup>65</sup> or occupant<sup>66</sup> of the land, or where applicant for the road paid the surveyors more than their legal fees.<sup>67</sup>

Reversal. The proceedings will be reversed where the petition or report of the viewers fails to state, with reasonable certainty, the termini of the road;<sup>68</sup> where the owner over whose land the proposed road is to pass was not given personal notice of the time and place of the meeting of the viewers appointed to lay out the road, and also of the time and place when and where the damages are to be assessed;<sup>69</sup> where the lower tribunal, on confirming the report of the viewers, fails to observe the statutory requirement to fix the width of the road;<sup>70</sup> or where the record shows that the order for the opening of the road was issued before payment or tender into court of the damages assessed,<sup>71</sup> or that the road was laid out on the bridge of another, without making a special order relative to the maintenance and repair of the bridge.<sup>72</sup>

(a) In General

No appeal lies in proceedings to establish a private road, except where it is authorized by constitutional or statutory provision.

In accordance with general principles no appeal lies in proceedings to establish a private road,<sup>74</sup> except where it is authorized by constitutional or statutory provision.<sup>75</sup> Accordingly, it has been said that the right of appeal will not be denied if by fair and reasonable interpretation of the law it can be allowed, and the courts will give a liberal construction to the statute in favor of the right.<sup>76</sup>

Time for taking appeal. The time for taking an appeal is a matter of statutory regulation, and the appeal must be taken within the time prescribed.<sup>77</sup>

Effect as supersedeas. Under some statutes the appeal operates as a supersedeas or stay of proceedings on the judgment of the court below.<sup>78</sup>

Appeal bond. Some statutes require appellant to give a proper and sufficient bond, in order to confer jurisdiction on the appellate court.<sup>79</sup> Accordingly, where the filing of a proper bond is jurisdictional, there must be a compliance with the statute,<sup>80</sup> and the failure to file such a bond requires the appellate court to dismiss the proceedings.<sup>81</sup> A bond void for failure to comply with the statutory provisions cannot be amended, changed, or renewed.<sup>82</sup>

(b) Persons Entitled to Appeal; Parties

Generally an appeal may be taken by any person who is a party to the proceeding and is affected by the establishment of the private road.

One who does not appear to be affected by the establishment of a private road and is not a party to the proceeding cannot sustain a writ of error.<sup>83</sup> On an appeal by a landowner from a judgment establishing a road over his land, the adversary parties are the petitioners for the road, and not the members of the commissioner's court which rendered the judgment.<sup>84</sup> The fact that some defendants did not appeal from the judgment establishing the road

In Maine

(1) Persons aggrieved by town officers' action in laying out private way over such persons' land should present petition to county commissioners for relief and appeal from such commissioners' decision, instead of appealing directly to superior court from such action, although such appeal is proper procedure to present question of damages.—Connor v. Inhabitants of Southport, 12 A.2d 414, 136 Me. 447.

(2) Whether persons aggrieved by municipal officers' action in laying out private way over such persons' land have remedy under section of revised statutes providing for appeal to superior court depends on the will of the legislature, as expressed in such statute, and original statute may be considered in ascertaining such will, since revision of statutes usually simply iterates previous declaration of legislative will.—Connor v. Inhabitants of Southport, supra.

(3) The section of revised statutes, authorizing persons aggrieved by municipal officers' action in laying out private way to appeal to superior court, affords no remedy to owners of land, over which town officers laid out private way for owners of other land, since incorporation of original section, authorizing such appeals to supreme judicial court, in Revised Statutes directly after other sections of same chapter, with nothing to indicate change of intent, except to substitute superior court for supreme judicial court, did not alter or enlarge original scope and meaning of section.—Connor v. Inhabitants of Southport, supra.

(c) Decisions Reviewable

Only final judgments or orders are appealable in proceedings to establish a private road.

In accordance with the general rule only final judgments or orders are appealable in proceedings to establish a private road.<sup>86</sup> An order setting aside a report of viewers appointed to lay out a private road because of information improperly given them is not a final order from which an appeal lies.<sup>87</sup> On the other hand, where the court denies the petition for a road and dismisses the proceedings therefor, its action amounts to a final judgment from which the petitioners may take an appeal.<sup>88</sup>

(d) Scope and Extent of Review

aa. In general

bb. Trial de novo

aa. In General

The scope and extent of review in a proceeding to establish a private road are governed by statute, and ordinarily an appeal brings up for review only the record of the lower court.

The scope and extent of review in a proceeding to establish a private road are governed by the statutes.<sup>89</sup> Ordinarily an appeal brings up for review only the record of the lower court,<sup>90</sup> unless there is statutory provision for a trial de novo, as discussed infra subdivision (d) bb of this section.

Writ of error. Under some statutes there is considerable difference in the procedure to be had in the appellate court on an appeal and that to be had on a writ of error,<sup>91</sup> and the writ of error does not bring up the case from the lower court to the appellate court for trial de novo as does an appeal.<sup>92</sup> It is limited to a review of the record,<sup>93</sup> the correction of errors of law<sup>94</sup> and not of fact,<sup>95</sup> and to errors appearing on the face of the record only.<sup>96</sup>

Presumptions. It will be presumed on appeal that the viewers observed the order of the court,<sup>97</sup> performed their duty,<sup>98</sup> and that all things were properly done unless the contrary is shown.<sup>99</sup>

Under a number of statutes proceedings to establish a private road may be transferred to a court or tribunal having appellate jurisdiction, for a trial de novo.

(2) In proceeding to establish cartway or way of necessity from land of petitioners over defendant's land to state highway, appeal to superior court at term, from order of clerk adjudging right of petitioners to have the cartway and appointing jury of view to lay off the cartway, was not premature.—Triplett v. Lall, 41 S.E.2d 755, 237 N.C. 274.

(3) The superior court erred in granting motion by one petitioning for establishment of private cartway to remand cause to clerk for appointment of jury of view to lay off cartway without considering merits of petitioner's appeal from clerk's judgment denying petition, since such judgment is final and determinative of parties' rights until reversed or modified and appeal therefrom is not premature.—Dailey v. Bay, 3 S.E.2d 14, 215 N.C. 652.

(4) When appeal from clerk's judgment, denying petition for establishment of private cartway, was placed on civil issue docket, superior court acquired full jurisdiction thereof and was bound to determine fact issues and law questions involved, since it is only after final adjudication of petitioner's right to cartway that judge in his discretion may remand cause to clerk for procedural action necessary to execute judgment.—Dailey v. Bay, supra.

or tribunal<sup>3</sup> having appellate jurisdiction, for trial de novo. The statutes giving the right of appeal which vary considerably in their provisions prescribe what questions may be considered.<sup>3</sup> Under some statutes the appellate tribunal has full power to proceed and to take all steps necessary to a final determination of the cause,<sup>4</sup> including the power to appoint commissioners where the petition for the establishment of the road has been dismissed by the lower court,<sup>5</sup> or to appoint new commissioners where the petition for the road has been granted by the lower court.<sup>6</sup> Accordingly, where the unrestricted right of trial de novo is given, it is not essential to the jurisdiction of the appellate court that proof of jurisdictional facts and findings should be shown by the record of the lower court.<sup>7</sup> The case is tried on the facts as they exist at the time of the trial.<sup>8</sup>

Amendments. In accordance with the general rule the appellate court cannot permit an amendment of a petition for a road so as to change the petition to one for the laying out of a public road;<sup>9</sup> and, where a further appeal is taken to the court of last resort, the amendment will be stricken and the intermediate appellate court will proceed to act on the case as it was presented before the amendment was allowed.<sup>10</sup> On the other hand, where the commissioners are appointed in the appellate court, permitting them to reassemble and amend their report is not error where the case is continued to allow time to file exceptions to the amended report.<sup>11</sup>

Evidence. On a trial de novo it is incumbent on appellant to prove every material fact necessary to entitle him to judgment,<sup>12</sup> and either party is entitled to introduce any competent evidence to establish his position.<sup>13</sup> General principles relating to the weight and sufficiency of evidence apply in proceedings of this kind.<sup>14</sup>

Questions of law and fact. Whether or not reason exists for granting the proposed road is a question of fact for the jury<sup>15</sup> or for the court sitting as a jury;<sup>16</sup> and it has been held reversible error for the court to hold as a matter of law that petitioner is not entitled to the road.<sup>17</sup> However, under some statutes, where the question of necessity is submitted to a jury, their verdict is only advisory,<sup>18</sup> and the court must determine from the report, verdict, or other evidence whether the road should be established;<sup>19</sup> but the verdict is to be given much consideration and weight on the question of necessity,<sup>20</sup> especially when it follows the recommendation of the commissioners who view the premises and make the survey of the proposed passway.<sup>21</sup>

Instructions. General principles governing instructions apply on a trial de novo in proceedings to lay out private roads.<sup>22</sup>

In proceeding to establish passageway over land of another, constitutional requirement that jury be composed of twelve members and that verdict, including amount of damages assessed, be unanimous, may be waived by either litigant, and waiver results when matter is not presented to trial court or insisted on therein.—Parsley v. ## (e) Determination and Disposition

In some jurisdictions, if the proceeding to establish a private road is irregular and voidable, it should be reversed; in others the judgment must fix and determine the rights of all the parties.

In some jurisdictions, if the proceeding to establish a private road is irregular and voidable, it should be reversed;<sup>23</sup> but the appellate court will not reverse the order of the lower tribunal unless there is an irregularity apparent on the record,<sup>24</sup> or the court below exceeded its jurisdiction,<sup>25</sup> or erred in its judgment in point of law.<sup>26</sup> In other jurisdictions the judgment must fix and determine the rights of all the parties.<sup>27</sup> Accordingly it has been held to be essential for the appellate tribunal to provide in its judgment for the establishment of the road,<sup>28</sup> and a judgment merely awarding damages and remanding them to the lower tribunal for further proceedings is insufficient.<sup>29</sup>

Where the owner of an inclosed estate established a necessity for an outlet to the public highway but, due to the pendency of a suit to determine disputed boundaries of surrounding realty, a temporary judgment was granted by the lower court awarding a temporary right of way, it has been held that the matter will be remanded pending ultimate determination of boundary lines<sup>30</sup> and for a determination of the least burdensome right of way<sup>31</sup> and the amount of compensation to be paid to surrounding landowners.<sup>32</sup>

(2) To Courts of Last Resort

The right to appeal to courts of last resort is governed by statute. Where such an appeal is permitted under some statutes, the court does not try the case de novo, and the general rules as to determination and disposition of causes on appeal will be applied.

The right to appeal to courts of last resort is governed by statute.<sup>33</sup> By the express provision of some statutes authorizing an appeal to the circuit court from orders granting private roads, no appeal lies from the judgment rendered by that court to the court of last resort.<sup>34</sup> One who does not appear to be affected by the establishment of a private road, and is no party to the proceeding, cannot sustain a writ of error.<sup>35</sup>

Where such an appeal is permitted under some statutes, the appellate court does not try the case de novo.<sup>36</sup> Where the right of appeal exists, in accordance with general principles, the appellate court will indulge all reasonable presumptions in favor of the correctness of an order establishing a road if the court below has acquired jurisdiction of the proceeding.<sup>37</sup> Since the necessity of the road is a question of fact, the appellate court, where there is conflicting evidence, will view the evidence in the light most favorable to the appellee's cause,<sup>38</sup> and will not interfere with a finding as to the necessity by the trial court.<sup>39</sup> However, where a motion for a directed verdict is granted after the jury have returned a verdict of necessity, the appellate court must view the evidence as to the necessity for the road in the light least favorable to movant and most favorable to the adverse party.<sup>40</sup>

Determination and disposition. On appeal to a court of last resort the general rules as to the determination and disposition of causes on appeal will be applied.<sup>41</sup> Accordingly, where the lower tribunal is without jurisdiction to receive and act on the petition to establish a private road, its judgment entered thereon, as well as all subsequent actions thereon, is void, and the proceeding should be dismissed.<sup>42</sup>

In action to establish road from plaintiff's mining property over defendants' land, jury's verdict, finding that plaintiff was entitled to buy

Where the right of appeal exists, the court will reverse the proceedings where the statute on which they were based is unconstitutional<sup>43</sup> or where the petition on which the proceedings are founded fails to show, either directly or by necessary implication, that the proposed road is a way of necessity.<sup>44</sup>

Where the record contains inconsistent and conflicting findings, the appellate court will vacate the judgment and remand the cause for a rehearing.<sup>45</sup>

Where the lower court granted a private road without requiring payment of damages, the appellate court will vacate the judgment and remand the cause for a rehearing.<sup>46</sup>

Where the verdict of the jury on the question of necessity is supported by the evidence, the judgment of the lower court of no cause of action on defendant's motion for a directed verdict will be set aside,<sup>47</sup> and the case remanded for the entry of judgment on the verdict.<sup>48</sup>

§ 12. — Expenses and Costs

Under statutes so providing, the expenses of opening or constructing private roads must be borne by the persons who apply for them and who will be specially benefited by them. As a general rule the award of costs in a road proceeding is regulated by statute.

Under statutes so providing, the expenses of opening<sup>49</sup> or constructing<sup>50</sup> private roads must be borne by the persons who apply for them and who will be specially benefited by them. However, it has been held, notwithstanding a statute providing that the expense shall be wholly paid by the persons applying for it, that, if a private road is laid out on a petition for a public road, applicant is not liable for the expense of views.<sup>51</sup>

As a general rule, the award of costs in a proceeding to establish a private road is regulated by statute,<sup>52</sup> and costs will not be awarded in the absence of a statute providing therefor.<sup>53</sup> Under some statutes, it has been held that the landowner should not be required to pay the costs of the original hearing in the lower tribunal,<sup>54</sup> while under other statutes it has been held that, where the landowner fails to tender, before institution of suit, a satisfactory road, he must bear the cost of the suit in the lower tribunal.<sup>55</sup>

Costs where appeal is taken. Ordinarily, where an appeal is taken to a court of intermediate appellate jurisdiction or from that court to the court of last resort, the cost of the appeal is to be paid by the unsuccessful party as in other appeals in civil cases.<sup>56</sup> However, where the petition is dismissed in right of way and fixing damage, implicitly found that road was necessary to enable plaintiff to haul coal mined from his land to market, so as to preclude reversal of judgment thereon on ground that jury ignored instructions to award compensation and damages if jury believed that road was necessary for such purpose.—*Skidmore v. ### Statute construed

(1) The provisions of a statute that the cost of the whole proceeding shall be paid by applicant refers to the cost of the proceeding in the county court.—Vice v. Eden, 68 S.W. 125, 113 Ky. 255, 24 Ky.L. 132.

(2) The provision of the statute requiring petitioner to pay the necessary costs of the proceedings has no application where defendant appears and objects to and contests the proceedings and an appeal is taken to the circuit court from the judgment of the county court. The court will not hold that the law is such as to permit defendant in proceedings to establish a private road to contest the proceedings through the courts at plaintiff's expense, even though the final result is a judgment in favor of plaintiff and against defendant.—Holmes v. Houlshouser, Mo.App., 167 S.W.2d 943.

Increase of damages

(1) In proceeding to establish a road from petitioner's home over land of respondent to public highway, under the statute relating to judgment for costs according to "justice between the parties," respondent was entitled to costs of appeal from order of county court to establish the road to the circuit court, where the damages allowed by the county court were doubled by the circuit court and the appeal was taken in good faith and not arbitrarily or for purposes of delay.—Parrott v. Fullerton, 193 S.W.2d 654, 209 Ark. 1018.

(2) An order of circuit court on appeal from order of county court establishing a road from petitioner's home over the land of another to a public highway, that such order over whose land the road was to be laid should pay all costs of the appeal the lower tribunal and petitioner appeals to an intermediary appellate court where he prevails and damages are first ascertained against the landowner, costs in the intermediary appellate court, it has been held, are properly adjudged against petitioner.<sup>57</sup> On the other hand, it has also been held that, where petition is dismissed in the lower tribunal and, on appeal to the intermediate appellate court, petitioner is successful, the landowner must pay all costs, even though he was first awarded damages for his land in the intermediate appellate court.<sup>58</sup>

§ 13. — Operation and Effect

- a. In general
- b. Collateral attack

a. In General

Where the proper tribunal has acted in a proceeding to establish a private road, as to all matters within its jurisdiction, its judgment is final and determinative of the rights of the parties, until reversed or modified.

Where the proper tribunal has acted in a proceeding to establish a private road, as to all matters within its jurisdiction, its judgment is final and determinative of the rights of the parties, until reversed or modified.<sup>59</sup> However, where the tribunal, before which the proceeding to establish a private road is commenced, is without jurisdiction, its judgment, as well as all subsequent actions, is void.<sup>60</sup> In some jurisdictions, the establishment of a passage over the estate of a landowner does not take property from him,<sup>61</sup> or deprive him of the use of the land,<sup>62</sup> but it does guarantee to the estate in whose favor it is granted a right to pass over the land at some point to the public road.<sup>63</sup> Where the order of the court locates the road in part on land not owned by the landowner over whose property the road is requested, petitioner acquires no right as to that part.<sup>64</sup>

Estoppel to question validity of proceedings. If the tribunal had jurisdiction, the one at whose instance and for whose benefit the road was established by it is, by accepting and using the road, estopped from questioning the validity of the proceedings.<sup>65</sup>

b. Collateral Attack

Judgments or orders in proceedings to lay out private roads are not subject to collateral attack unless they are absolutely void.

In accordance with general principles, an absolute want of jurisdiction in the court or tribunal laying out a private road will be fatal to the proceedings even when they are collaterally drawn in question.<sup>66</sup> On the other hand, judgments or orders in proceedings to lay out private roads are not subject to collateral attack unless they are absolutely void.<sup>67</sup> If the court has jurisdiction, mere irregularities in the proceedings will not be considered,<sup>68</sup> and the judgment or order must stand until reversed by the proper tribunal.<sup>69</sup> In attacking such proceedings collaterally, the records of the tribunal establishing the road should receive a fair and reasonable interpretation,<sup>70</sup> and it is enough if such record clearly shows the purport of its judicial acts.<sup>71</sup>

§ 14. Pleading and Evidence of Existence

The person relying on the acts of a tribunal in establishing a private road must aver and prove all circumstances necessary to give it jurisdiction.

The person relying on the acts of a tribunal in establishing a private road must aver all circumstances necessary to give it jurisdiction.<sup>72</sup> Accord-was error, and all costs of the proceedings including costs of appeal to the supreme court were assessed against the petitioner.—Parrott v. Fullerton, supra.

ingly, the use of a private road is not acquired as a private right and should not be pleaded as a private right of way.<sup>73</sup> It should be pleaded in the same manner in which the right to use a public road is pleaded.<sup>74</sup> An averment of the fact that the locus in quo was part of the private road will be sufficient.<sup>75</sup> Likewise, the person relying on the acts of a tribunal in establishing a private road must prove all the circumstances necessary to give it jurisdiction,<sup>76</sup> and, if the particular mode in which a private road was laid out is pleaded, it must be proved as pleaded.<sup>77</sup>

§ 15. Maintenance and Repair

Under some statutes the duty to maintain and repair a private road rests on the person or persons for whose benefit the road is established, while under other statutes the duty is cast on the public.

Under some statutes the duty to maintain and repair a private road rests on the person or persons for whose benefit the road is established,<sup>78</sup> and not on the public.<sup>79</sup> There must be a compliance with this statutory duty,<sup>80</sup> although it has been held that the person for whose benefit the private road is established is not bound to keep in repair that part of the road which runs through his own land, for the benefit of those who may have acquired a prescriptive right to use it.<sup>81</sup> Sometimes statutes authorizing private roads provide that they shall not become public highways in the sense that they must be kept in repair at the expense of the public;<sup>82</sup> but, even where the statute is silent on the subject, no obligation rests on the public to keep the road in repair.<sup>83</sup> On the other hand, it has been held that, where the statute under which a private road is laid out speaks of it as a public highway, the duty is cast on the public to keep it in a suitable state of repair.<sup>84</sup> A statute providing that a town board "may" expend road and bridge funds in the care and improvement of cartways is not merely permissive, but imposes a duty in that respect to the extent to which the public interest requires.<sup>85</sup>

Gates. Statutes authorizing private roads, subject to gates, may impose the duty of the erection and maintenance of such gates on the person at whose instance and for whose benefit the road is established.<sup>86</sup>

Fences. Unless the cost of fencing has been assessed as damages, the duty to fence a private road devolves on the person for whose accommodation it was laid out.<sup>87</sup>

§ 16. Obstructions and Encroachments

- a. In general
- b. Actions

a. In General

An interference with the reasonably free use of a private road may constitute an obstruction.

An interference with the reasonably free use of a private road may constitute an obstruction.<sup>88</sup> Accordingly an owner of land abutting on a private way has no right to use the half of the way adjacent to his premises for any purpose incompatible with its reasonably free use as a way.<sup>89</sup> He has no right to build sheds on the road<sup>90</sup> or to encumber it with lumber, stone, iron, and other things in great quantities.<sup>91</sup> Likewise, it has been held that the construction of a log slide on the road by the person on whose application it has been laid out is not a proper use of the road.<sup>92</sup> It has also been held that, if a private road of a given width is ordered to be laid out, the building of his fences, by the owner of the land, so as not to leave the road of the specified width in the clear, constitutes an obstruction.<sup>93</sup>

Right to remove obstruction. Where a road is laid out as a strictly private road and not for the use of the public, obstructions placed in the road by the owner of the land over which it is laid out cannot lawfully be removed by one having no right to use the road.<sup>94</sup>

Of inchoate right to road. Under some statutes, when a road has been used as a private way for one year, the owner of the land through which the road passes,<sup>95</sup> or his tenant,<sup>96</sup> may not close or obstruct it without first giving the users of the way thirty days' notice in writing so that they may take steps to have it made permanent by filing application to the proper county authorities to have the road established as a private way in accordance with other statutes providing that this may be done.<sup>97</sup> If the owner obstructs the way without giving the required notice, he will be required to remove it in proper proceedings therefor, as discussed infra subdivision b of this section, and the fact that the private way was opened up by the landowner's predecessor in title under an agreement with the adjoining landowner that, if it ever became a nuisance, it could be closed,<sup>98</sup> or the fact that the private way is being used for immoral purposes,<sup>99</sup> does not give the landowner the right to close the way without giving the common users the statutory notice. Nevertheless, the fact that a private way has been used for as much as one year does not establish a way by prescription;<sup>1</sup> nor does it prevent the owner of land from closing such way,<sup>2</sup> but only requires him to give thirty days' notice in writing to the common users for the purpose mentioned.<sup>3</sup>

b. Actions

- (1) In general
- (2) Actions for damages
- (3) Injunction and removal proceedings

(1) In General

A person having a right to the use of a private road has a cause of action against one who obstructs the road or impedes its use.

A person having a right to the use of a private road has a cause of action against one who obstructs the road or impedes its use.<sup>4</sup> Accordingly, a person on whose application a private road was laid out has a cause of action against one who obstructs it.<sup>5</sup> Likewise, an abutter having a right to reasonably convenient points of connection with the road has an actionable right against another abutter who impedes his use of such points.<sup>6</sup>

(2) Actions for Damages

The person at whose instance and for whose benefit a private road was established may maintain an action at law to recover damages arising from an encroachment of a private road.

The person at whose instance and for whose benefit a private road was established may maintain an action at law to recover damages arising from an encroachment of a private road.<sup>7</sup> It is no defense to an action for a substantial encroachment that plaintiff was not thereby interrupted in the use of the road;<sup>8</sup> but it is a good defense that defendant yielded his assent, expressly or impliedly, to the encroachment.<sup>9</sup>

Under statutory provisions granting an inchoate right to a road, discussed supra subdivision a of this section, it has been held that a petition for money damages for alleged tortious past obstructions by defendant of a prescriptive private way over defendant's land is not subject to general demurrer with respect to such claim.<sup>10</sup> It has also been held that, a claim of damages generally in a specified sum states a cause of action for recovery of general damages, nominal damages, and punitive damages, as the evidence may show,<sup>11</sup> and is not subject to dismissal as a claim of no recoverable damages.<sup>12</sup>

(3) Injunction and Removal Proceedings

Injunction to restrain the obstruction of private roads is a proper remedy where an action at law would not furnish an adequate remedy, or where the obstruction works special and peculiar injury to the party asking for the injunction.

would not furnish an adequate remedy,<sup>13</sup> or where the obstruction works special and peculiar injury to the party asking for the injunction.<sup>14</sup>

Where the statutes provide for an inchoate right to a private way, as discussed supra subdivision a of this section, the statutes may also provide a summary remedy for the removal of obstructions from the private way where the owner of land over which such way passes has failed to give the required notice before creating the obstruction.<sup>15</sup> In such jurisdictions, if the obstruction of a private way has been completed, the statutory remedy before the ordinary will afford to the users of the way an adequate remedy at law by removal of the obstruction,<sup>16</sup> so that a petition for injunction will not lie against the owner of the land through which the way passes,<sup>17</sup> but, if the petition alleges a threatened,<sup>18</sup> or a threatened additional obstruction to a completed obstruction as an imminent situation,<sup>19</sup> the remedy of injunction will lie, since the statutory remedy, available only for removing existing obstructions, would not cover the situation,<sup>20</sup> and since the injunction would not be mandatory in character.<sup>21</sup> Where the owner of the land through which a private way runs closes the road without giving the statutory notice, he is not entitled to an injunction to restrain a common user from removing the impediments from the road.<sup>22</sup> The petition must contain a statement of all the facts necessary to entitle the petitioner to the relief prayed.<sup>23</sup> Accordingly, while the petition may be based on both a claim for a prescriptive way and a claim for a way in use for one year, where the owner of the land through which the way passes has failed to give the required notice before creating the obstruction,<sup>24</sup> it must not confuse the two claims,<sup>25</sup> and on proper demurrer petitioner may be required to indicate on which claim he relies.<sup>26</sup> The petition need only describe the road with reasonable certainty,<sup>27</sup> and not with the particularity demanded in a proceeding to establish a private road.<sup>28</sup> The burden to show that the notice required by the statute was given is on him whose duty it was to give it.<sup>29</sup> A petitioner for the removal of obstructions on a road used for one year must recover on the case made by him, if at all.<sup>30</sup> Accordingly, where the petition for removal of obstructions is based solely on the ground that petitioner's right has been established by prescription, judgment cannot be rendered requiring obstructions to be removed on the ground that the owner failed to give the statutory notice of intention to close the way.<sup>31</sup> However, while an applicant may base his right to relief on the statute relative to prescriptive ways, and on the statute requiring the landowner to give thirty days' notice before obstructing a way used for one year, the order or judgment should show on which claim applicant relied.<sup>32</sup>

§ 17. Use for Travel

Where a private road is considered a public road in the sense that it is open to all who see fit to use it, the owner of the land through which the road is laid out cannot maintain an action in trespass against any person using it.

Where, as discussed supra § 1, a private road is considered a public road in the sense that it is open to all who see fit to use it, it is immaterial that the road is subject to gates and bars,<sup>33</sup> or that it is

50 C.J. p 398 note 97.

The purpose of the legislature in authorizing the town to determine whether a private way shall be subject to gates and bars is to provide a method by which the owners of the land affected could lessen the hazard of unwarranted or casual intrusion on their property due to its being opened to easy access from the main merely a cul de sac.<sup>34</sup> Being thus considered as a public road, it necessarily follows that the owner of the land through which the road is laid out cannot maintain an action of trespass against any person using it;<sup>35</sup> and the fact that the road was invalid by reason of some defect in the proceedings leading to its laying out does not affect this rule.<sup>36</sup> On the other hand, in those jurisdictions where a private road is for the exclusive use by travel of the particular person or persons for whom it was laid out, such person or persons may maintain an action of trespass on the case against the occupant of the land through which it was laid out,<sup>37</sup> or any other person<sup>38</sup> making use of it.

§ 18. Injuries from Defects or Obstructions

Ordinarily, if the duty is imposed to keep a private road in repair, damages are recoverable for injuries resulting from failure to make suitable repairs.

If the duty is imposed on a town to keep a private road in repair it will be liable for special damages caused by its failure to make suitable repairs.<sup>39</sup> There is no such distinction between private roads with gates or bars, and those without, as to justify a different rule as to the liability for want of repair, where, in both cases, they are termed highways in the statute.<sup>40</sup> The objection that a portion of a road was laid out at a greater width than that prayed for in the petition cannot be urged by the town in a suit for injuries caused by its failure to keep the road in repair.<sup>41</sup> On the other hand, it has been held that a county is not liable for an injury produced by a defect in a private road;<sup>42</sup> nor is it liable for a failure to provide a safe approach from a private road to a public highway of the county, or vice versa.<sup>43</sup> Likewise, it has also been held that a county is not liable for negligence in maintaining or permitting an unsafe approach from a private road to a public bridge,<sup>44</sup> at least where such approach is neither essential nor necessary to the existence or use of the public bridge.<sup>45</sup>

§ 19. Alteration, Vacation, and Extinguishment

- a. Alteration
- b. Vacation
- c. Extinguishment

a. Alteration

Under some statutes, any person or persons interested may petition to alter a private road.

Under some statutes, any person or persons interested may petition to alter a private road.<sup>46</sup> Under such statutes, the owner of the land over which the road passes is clearly entitled to petition for such alteration.<sup>47</sup> If the statute authorizing the proceeding requires petitioner therein to put the new road in as good condition as the old, such provision does not apply where the road, as first located, has never been opened.<sup>48</sup>

b. Vacation

The power of the legislature to establish private roads carries with it, as a necessary incident, the power to provide for the vacation of such roads, when they shall become no longer necessary.

The power of the legislature to establish private roads carries with it, as a necessary incident, the power to provide for the vacation of such roads, when they shall become no longer necessary.<sup>49</sup> Accordingly, it has been held that the road laid out by public authority may be discontinued by it without the consent or against the will of the person on whose petition it was originally established.<sup>50</sup>

Cases of necessity

The power to widen an existing right of way is limited to those cases where applicant cannot reach a public highway by going over his own land.—State v. Zubke, 227 N.W. 947, 200 Wis. 227.

50 C.J. p 398 note 11.

Grounds. The grounds for, or circumstances under, which a private road may be vacated or discontinued are usually a matter of special statutory regulation.<sup>51</sup> Accordingly, under some statutes a private road may be vacated when it has become useless, inconvenient, and burdensome,<sup>52</sup> as where the landowner for whose benefit the private road was established has another convenient way over the land of a third person<sup>53</sup> or where a public road has been established to which there is convenient or practical access.<sup>54</sup>

Proceedings. A private road may not be vacated except on strict compliance with the statute.<sup>55</sup> Accordingly, where advertisement is required by statute, the township in which the road proposed to be vacated lies must be named, so that all concerned may know with certainty the location of the road.<sup>56</sup> The petition must contain a statement of all the facts which, by the statute, are made necessary to entitle petitioner to the relief prayed.<sup>57</sup> Under a statute providing that the petition to vacate a private road must set forth in a clear and distinct manner the situation and circumstances of such road or of the part thereof which applicants may desire to have vacated, a petition for the vacation of the entire road need not specify the portions of the road to be vacated,<sup>58</sup> or the particular reasons why the vacation of such portions is desired.<sup>59</sup>

An omission of the surveyors to state in their return the township in which the road proposed to be vacated lies has been held to be fatal, where the township controls the appointment of the surveyors.<sup>60</sup>

Review. In reviewing by appeal proceedings for the vacation of a road only the regularity of the proceedings can be considered;<sup>61</sup> but the proceeding will be vacated if it appears that the requirements of the statute necessary to give jurisdiction have not been strictly followed.<sup>62</sup> Likewise, where a court rule provides that no viewer shall be entertained by, or at the expense of, any person interested, a proceeding for the vacation will be set aside where the viewer is entertained by a party of record,<sup>63</sup> although his interest in the vacation or continuance of the road is doubtful.<sup>64</sup>

In some jurisdictions, where the petitioner who has procured a private road to be laid out over the lands of another acquires title to the servient tenement, the right to the road is extinguished not only as to him, but as to all other persons, while, in other jurisdictions, the right to use the road can be extinguished only by the action of the proper public authority.

There is a conflict of authority as to whether unity in title and possession of all the land occupied by a private road, which was laid out by public authority, operate to discontinue it. In some jurisdictions, where petitioner who has procured a private road to be laid out over the lands of another acquires title to the servient tenement, the right to the road is extinguished not only as to him, but as to all other persons,<sup>65</sup> while, in other jurisdictions, the right to use the road can be extinguished only by the action of the proper public authority.<sup>66</sup>

demned for his failure to open a private road within the time specified in the judgment which ordered the opening of the road.<sup>67</sup> Failure to open the road within the time fixed by the judgment will not authorize the imposition of a penalty, where defendant was led honestly to believe that he had a longer time than that fixed by the judgment within which to open the road, and neither he nor his attorney knew differently until after the time fixed to open the road had expired.<sup>68</sup>

Effect of appeal. In an action to recover the penalty imposed for failure to open a private road, the taking of an appeal and the giving of a supersedeas bond so far prevent the judgment from becoming a final one that no action for a penalty will lie until final judgment has been rendered by the appellate court.<sup>69</sup> Accordingly, after a judgment of the circuit court which ordered the opening has been affirmed by the supreme court and its mandate sent down to the circuit court, the circuit court should fix a time within which the road is to be opened,<sup>70</sup> and, until such time is fixed by an order of court, the successful plaintiff cannot recover from the derelict landowner the prescribed penalty.<sup>71</sup>

§ 22. — Leaving open Gate across Road

Some statutes impose a penalty on any person using a private road for leaving open a swinging gate placed across it by the owner of property through which the road passes.

Some statutes impose a penalty on any person using a private road for leaving open a swinging gate placed across it by the owner of property through which the road passes.<sup>72</sup> In order to maintain an action to recover such a penalty, plaintiff must prove that the way in question is a private road, laid out or made such in the manner prescribed by statute.<sup>73</sup> It is no defense to an action for the statutory penalty that defendant had a private way where the private road in question was laid out.<sup>74</sup>

§ 23. Criminal Offenses

Although there is authority that the obstruction of a private road laid out pursuant to law is a criminal offense, indictable as a public nuisance, there is also authority to the contrary.

In some jurisdictions, the obstruction of a private road laid out pursuant to law is a criminal offense,<sup>75</sup> indictable as a public nuisance.<sup>76</sup> However, in other jurisdictions it has been held that the obstruction of a private road cannot be a public nuisance,<sup>77</sup> and hence is not indictable as such.<sup>78</sup>

An indictment for an offense with respect to private roads should charge all the elements of the offense.<sup>79</sup> Accordingly, under a statute making it a public nuisance to obstruct or encroach on the public highways, private ways, etc., an indictment which charges accused with obstructing a "private highway" charges no offense.<sup>80</sup> Likewise, where the statute makes it a criminal offense maliciously to injure a private road laid out by authority of law, an indictment which fails to allege facts showing that such road was so laid out, and which does not even contain a direct allegation to that effect, is fatally defective.<sup>81</sup> An indictment for breaking down a gate across a private road established according to law is sufficient if it is in the words of the statute.<sup>82</sup>

Since, as discussed supra § 1, a private road is a public road in the sense that it is open to all who see fit to use it, an information charging accused with obstructing a private road established according to law has been held to state an offense under the statutes prohibiting the obstruction of a public road.<sup>83</sup>

Defenses. Where the crime charged is the breaking down of a gate across a private road located according to law, it is a matter of defense that the road was not located according to law, and is therefore not a private road in law.<sup>84</sup>

Evidence. General rules as to the weight and

§ 24. Taxes and Assessments

The commissioners of the roads have been held to have power to compel an individual to work on a private path.

The commissioners of the roads have been held to have power to compel an individual to work on a road, in which there is a right of two or more persons, and which is called a private path, as contradistinguished from a public highway.<sup>86</sup>

Work on roads by taxpayers generally is discussed in Highways §§ 307-309.

PRIVELEGIO. In Spanish law, a favor, concession, or exemption granted to someone.<sup>2</sup>

PRIVILEGE. The word "privilege" has a variety of meanings, according to the connection or context in which it is used;<sup>3</sup> but inherent in the term is the idea of something apart and distinct from a common right which pertains to all citizens or exists in all subjects, and the word connotes some sort of a special grant from the sovereignty, some type of necessary special permission or consent which the sovereign in its discretion might have withheld or failed to provide, such as the right to do business as a corporation or the right to record a mortgage.<sup>4</sup> Standing alone the word "privilege" carries the idea of permission, a permissive use,<sup>5</sup> and, while it is frequently defined in terms of a right or immunity granted, it is often said that a person takes privileges to which he may not be entitled.<sup>6</sup>

The word "privilege," as used in its broad and comprehensive sense, means an advantage;<sup>7</sup> a peculiar advantage;<sup>8</sup> a peculiar benefit, favor, or advantage;<sup>9</sup> a particular and peculiar benefit or advantage<sup>10</sup> enjoyed by a person, company, or class, beyond the common advantage of other citizens;<sup>11</sup> a favor granted;<sup>12</sup> an option.<sup>13</sup> The word "privi-

"Privilege" is further defined as meaning legal power;<sup>37</sup> a power granted to an individual or corporation to do something, or enjoy some advantage, which is not of common right;<sup>38</sup> a law made in favor of an individual;<sup>39</sup> an affirmative act of selection of special subjects of favors not enjoyed by citizens in general;<sup>40</sup> a license or permission on specified terms to do that which is in general prohibited;<sup>41</sup> a license to do anything which is prohibited by the general law.<sup>42</sup>

The word "privilege" has the same significance in American jurisprudence that it has in Roman law,<sup>43</sup> but in Roman law "privilege" also means a right of priority of satisfaction out of the proceeds of the thing in a concurrence of creditors;<sup>44</sup> something conferred on an individual by a private law, and hence some peculiar benefit or advantage, some right or immunity, not enjoyed by the world at large.<sup>45</sup> In the civil law the word "privilege" has a very different, and much wider, meaning than it had in the common law,<sup>46</sup> and as used in the civil law is practically equivalent to the term "lien" as stated in Liens § 1 d.

"Privilege" has been held to be equivalent to, or synonymous with, "claim" see 14 C.J.S. p 1185 note 70, and "immunity" see 42 C.J.S. p 397 note 88.

It has been compared with, or distinguished from, "corporate right" see Corporations § 935, "immunity" see 42 C.J.S. p 397 note 89, "occupation" see 67 C.J.S. p 77 note 52, "power" see ante p 398 note 73, and "pursuits."<sup>47</sup>

The terms "privilege" and "right" have been compared and distinguished,<sup>48</sup> and it has been said that the granting of a privilege may confer a right.<sup>49</sup>

The term "privilege" is treated in various connections throughout this work, and is applied to many activities. Naturalization is a privilege, see Aliens § 122, and the operation of an automobile on the public highway is a privilege, as stated in Motor Vehicles § 10 a. The right to hold public office is a privilege, see Officers § 11, and it is stated in Elections § 2 that voting is sometimes regarded as a privilege. Avoidance of a contract by an infant is a mere personal privilege, as stated in Infants § 75. Other privileges of infancy are treated in Infants §§ 19-30. In many jurisdictions a person takes property by descent as a privilege, see Descent and Distribution § 2. However, ownership of property is not regarded as a privilege, but rather as one of the rights which governments were organized to protect, as stated in Property § 13.

The privilege of a witness, including the privilege against self-incrimination, is treated in the C.J.S. title Witnesses §§ 430-457, also 70 C.J. p 717 note 22-p 759 note 7. The privileges of a judge are discussed in Judges §§ 10, 11. A mere personal privilege as not the subject of a chattel mortgage see Chattel Mortgages § 21.

The right to practice law is a privilege, as stated in Attorney and Client § 4 b, and the right to practice medicine is also frequently regarded as a privilege, as stated in Physicians and Surgeons § 2. An occupation or business which requires a license from some proper authority is commonly denominated a "privilege," see Licenses § 1 b, and particular occupations and businesses which are subject to

Used interchangeably

The word "privilege" is often used interchangeably with the word "right." The ordinary layman would speak of his right to travel a public way and of a privilege or permission to cross the land of a neighbor.—Schmelder v. Maughan, 227 N.W. 294, 295, 199 Wis. 592.

Inaccurate use

"While the term 'privilege' is often used as synonymous with the term 'right,' it is not an accurate use of the term."—State v. Grosnickle, 206 N.W. 895, 896, 189 Wis. 17, 22.

"Rights" and "privileges" compared

"It may be conceded that to one accustomed to legal nicety in the choice of words there is a distinct difference in definition between 'privilege' and 'right'; nevertheless, the two words are commonly used interchangeably as synonymous, not only amongst laymen, but by lawyers, and, indeed, not infrequently, it must be admitted, even in judicial opinions."—Tantum v. Keller, 123 A. 299, 300, 95 N.J.Eq. 466.

49. Wis.—Schmelder v. Maughan, 227 N.W. 294, 295, 199 Wis. 592.

licensing tax provisions are enumerated in Licenses § 30.

Excise taxes may be imposed on the privilege of engaging in an occupation or calling, either by the federal government see Internal Revenue § 510, or under the authority of the state government see the C.J.S. title Taxation § 122, also 61 C.J. p 155 note 88, p 242 note 83. The word "privilege" is also treated in Franchises § 1 et seq. For reference to other particular applications and specific uses of the word consult the Descriptive-Word Index.

The plural form, "privileges," is employed in various constitutional provisions. The Constitution of the United States Article IV § 2 provides that "the Citizens of each State shall be entitled to all Privileges and Immunities of Citizens in the several States," and the Fourteenth Amendment, § 1, provides that "no State shall make or enforce any law which shall abridge the privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States." Various state constitutions contain provisions which forbid the grant to any citizen or class of citizens of privileges not belonging equally to all citizens. These various constitutional provisions are treated in Constitutional Law §§ 456-501.

As a verb, the word "privilege" is defined as meaning to grant some particular right or favor to; to invest with a certain privilege or immunity.<sup>50</sup>

Privileged communication. Defined generally see 15 C.J.S. p 639 note 44. The term is employed in the law with two significations. In one sense it signifies oral or printed utterances which are not actionable although defamatory, and in this sense the term is treated in Libel and Slander §§ 87-120. In another sense the term "privileged communication" has reference to communications made during the existence of certain confidential relationships recognized by law and not competent to be produced in court during the trial of a case. The subject is treated in the C.J.S. title Witnesses §§ 252-314, also 70 C.J. p 376 note 39-p 472 note 8.

PRIVILEGIUM. In modern civil law, in its general sense, every peculiar right or favor granted by the law, contrary to the common rule.<sup>51</sup>

PRIVILEGIUM OLERICALE. The benefit of clergy.<sup>52</sup>

PRIVILY. Privately or secretly.<sup>53</sup>

PRIVITY; PRIVIES; PRIVY. Although it has been said that there is no definition of the word "privity" which can be applied in all cases,<sup>54</sup> as most generally defined,<sup>55</sup> and in its broadest sense,<sup>56</sup> "privity" is the mutual or successive relationship to the same right of property,<sup>57</sup> or such an identifica-

"Privity" is also defined as meaning a successive relationship to, or ownership of, the same property from a common source;<sup>59</sup> a succession of relationship to the same thing, whether created by deed or by other act, or by operation of law;<sup>60</sup> a succession of relationships by deed or other act or by operation of law;<sup>61</sup> and is further defined as meaning a derivative kind of interest, founded on, or growing out of, the contract of another.<sup>62</sup>

In the feudal sense, "privity" denotes mutuality, but in our body of the law it has a wider and differing significance because it may not only include mutuality, but it also includes successive relationship to the same right of property.<sup>63</sup> plies a derivation of title,<sup>65</sup> and exists only because of the relationship between the parties or because of the derivative character of their title.<sup>66</sup> Privy exists where successive relationship of, or ownership to, the same right of property from a common source appears,<sup>67</sup> and it exists between two successive holders when the latter takes under the earlier, as by grant,<sup>68</sup> descent, will, or voluntary transfer of possession.<sup>69</sup> Thus, in order to constitute privity between successive occupants of property, all that is necessary is that one receives his possession from the other by some act of such other, or by operation of law.<sup>70</sup>

The ground of privity is property, not personal relation,<sup>71</sup> and it relates to persons in their relation to property, and does not relate to any question,<sup>72</sup> claim or right<sup>73</sup> independent of property. There are various kinds of privity which are discussed in following subdivisions, but, whether the privity be one of estate, contract, blood, or law, it has no personal basis as a mere matter of sentiment, but rests on some actual mutual or successive relationship to the same right of property.<sup>74</sup>

Absolute<sup>75</sup> identity<sup>76</sup> of interest is essential to privity, and sometimes the word "privity" merely means identity of interest,<sup>77</sup> and is defined as meaning interest<sup>78</sup> or mutuality of interest;<sup>79</sup> and it is said that in legal literature "privity" means partaking of, having a part or interest in or cognizance of any action, matter, or thing.<sup>80</sup>

When the word "privity" is not employed in the technical sense of the common law it implies knowledge and something more; it implies special or particular knowledge showing active consent or concurrence.<sup>81</sup> Thus "privity" is frequently defined as meaning cognizance implying consent or concurrence;<sup>82</sup> joint knowledge with another of a private concern,<sup>83</sup> which is often supposed to imply con-

Privy signifies merely succession of rights, that is, the devolution, in whole or in part, of the rights and duties of one person on another, as in the case of the succession of an assignee in bankruptcy to the estate of the bankrupt on the one hand, and to the rights of the creditors on the other, or it signifies the derivation of rights, by one person from and holding in subordination to those of another, as in the case of a tenant.—*Thompson v. sent or concurrence;<sup>84</sup> and in a general, nontechnical sense<sup>85</sup> privity is private knowledge.<sup>86</sup>

"Privity" is sometimes defined as meaning connection;<sup>87</sup> connection or bond of union between parties as to some particular transaction;<sup>88</sup> having any knowledge or connection with something;<sup>89</sup> relation which creates obligation;<sup>90</sup> and it may mean the existence of an obligation from a promisee to a stranger,<sup>91</sup> and it is in this sense that the term is used in expressing the rule that a third person may sue on a contract made for his benefit only when there is privity or some duty or obligation owing by the promisee to the third person, this rule being set out in Contracts § 519 c (2) (g).

While the word "privity" is in some cases defined as meaning a partaker, persons connected together or having a mutual interest in the same action or thing by some relation other than that of actual contract between them,<sup>92</sup> the terms more frequently employed in expressing this concept is "privity" when referring to one person, and "privies" when denoting several persons.

The word "privies" is defined as meaning those who stand in mutual or successive relationship to the same rights of property;<sup>93</sup> those who have a mutual or successive relationship to the same rights of property<sup>94</sup> or subject matter,<sup>95</sup> such as personal representatives, heirs, devisees, legatees, assignees, voluntary grantees, or judgment creditors, or purchasers from them with notice of the facts.<sup>96</sup> Privies are persons who are parties to, or have an interest in, any action or thing, or any relation to another;<sup>97</sup> those who are partakers of, or have an interest in any action<sup>98</sup> or thing,<sup>99</sup> or any relation to another;<sup>1</sup> persons connected together, or having a mutual interest in the same action or thing, by some relation other than that of actual contract between them;<sup>2</sup> persons whose interest in an estate is derived from the contract or conveyance of others.<sup>3</sup> Privies are those who are so connected with the parties in estate, or in blood, or in law, as to be identified with them in interest, and consequently to be affected with them by the litigation,<sup>4</sup> and all others not included in these classes are strangers.<sup>5</sup> However, the fact that persons are interested in the same question or in proving the same facts, or that one person is interested in the result of litigation involving the other does not make them privies.<sup>6</sup>

The word "privity" is the root of the common word "privity,"<sup>7</sup> and as a noun is defined as meaning a person who has succeeded to some right or obligation which one of the parties to the act derived through the act or incurred under it;<sup>8</sup> one who is a partaker or has any part or interest in any action, matter, or thing;<sup>9</sup> a person having an interest derived from a contract or conveyance to which he is not himself a party;<sup>10</sup> one who has an interest in an estate created by another;<sup>11</sup> one who derives his right or his title to property from another;<sup>12</sup> and, more particularly, one who is a partner.<sup>13</sup> To be a privy to another, a man must claim by or under that other, by blood, as heir, by representation, as executor, or by contract, as vendee, assignee, and the like;<sup>14</sup> and a privy must come after him to whom he is privy, and can never precede.<sup>15</sup> Thus the general meaning of privies includes those who claim under or in right of parties,<sup>16</sup> and privies are persons claiming under another;<sup>17</sup> persons claiming under the former parties;<sup>18</sup> and privies occupy that relation to others because of derivative rights of property.<sup>19</sup>

In order to make a man a privy to an action he must have acquired an interest in the subject matter of the action either by inheritance, succession, or purchase from a party subsequently to the action, or he must hold property subordinately.<sup>20</sup>

The question who are privies in a given case is often difficult<sup>21</sup> and requires careful examination into the circumstances of each case as it arises.<sup>22</sup> There are general statements to the effect that execu-

There are statements to the effect that there is privity of estate between them, see infra p 960 note 51, and it is said that there is close privity of ownership between them,<sup>30</sup> but in Estates § 34 it is stated that there is no privity between a life tenant and a remainderman. The statement is made in Adverse Possession § 130 f that it is both maintained and denied that sufficient privity exists between a life tenant and his remainderman to permit a tacking of their possession.

A judgment is conclusive and binding on persons who are in privity with the parties to the action

A person standing in privity with the original parties is entitled to secure the reformation of an instrument, and is a proper person against whom reformation may be had, as stated in the C.J.S. title Reformation of Instruments §§ 47, 54, also 53 C.J. p 976 note 8, p 980 note 80. The word "privity," as used in the Limited Liability Act, 46 U.S.C.A. § 143, dealing with the liability of ship-owners is treated in the C.J.S. title Shipping § 244, also 53 C.J. p 652 note 47-p 659 note 55. #### 34. Classes enumerated

(1) "Thus there are privies in estate, as donor and donee, lessor and lessee, and joint tenants; privies in blood, as heir and ancestor, and coparceners; privies in representation, as executors and testator, administrators and intestate; privies in law, where the law, without privity of blood or estate, casts the land upon another, as by escheat. All these are more generally classed into privies in estate, privies in blood, and privies in law.' And in note 1 is given privity in tenure between landlord and tenant; privity in contract alone, or in the relation between lessor and lessee, or heir and tenant in dower, or by the curtesy, by the covenants of the latter, after he has assigned his term there are privies in representation<sup>35</sup> or in deed.<sup>36</sup> There is also privity of contract which is defined generally in Contracts § 518, and discussed as an element of tort in the C.J.S. title Torts § 9, also 62 C.J. p 1099 notes 83-86. Other classes of privity are privity of person, privity of possession, and privity in tenure, these being discussed in the following subdivisions.

Definitions respecting the different kinds of privity are somewhat difficult to formulate,<sup>37</sup> but it has been said that all privies are, in effect, if not in name, privies in estate.<sup>38</sup>

also between baron and feme,<sup>47</sup> copartners,<sup>48</sup> the lord by escheat and the terre-tenant,<sup>49</sup> and successors in office.<sup>50</sup>

It has also been said that privity of estate is that which exists between tenant for life and remainderman or reversioner, etc., and their respective assignees,<sup>51</sup> and it is stated supra p 959 note 30 that there is close privity of ownership between the tenant for life and the remainderman, but whether privity does or does not exist between the tenant for life and the remainderman is open to question in view of the statements made in Adverse Possession § 130 f and Estates § 34.

A privity in estate is one who derives his title to the property in question by purchase<sup>52</sup> or who takes by conveyance;<sup>53</sup> a successor to the same estate, to a stranger; privity in estate alone, between the lessee and the grantee of the reversion; and privity in both estate and contract, as between lessor and lessee.—Ottensoser v. Scott, 37 So. 161, 163, 164, 47 Fla. 276, 110 Am.S.R. 137, 66 L.R.A. 346, 4 Ann.Cas. 1076.

(2) There are three manners of privities: First, privity in case of estate only; second, privity in respect of contract only; third, privity in respect of estate and contract together.—Mygatt v. Coe, 26 N.E. 611, 613, 124 N.Y. 212, 11 L.R.A. 646.

(3) The relationship of privity may be by operation of law, by descent, or by voluntary or involuntary transfer from one person to another.—Moore v. Shook, 114 N.E. 592, 595, 276 Ill. 47—Towle v. Quante, 92 N.E. 967, 969, 246 Ill. 568.

(4) There are five kinds of privies; privies in blood, privies in representation, privies in estate, privies in respect to contracts, and privies on account of estate and contract together.—Tinkham v. Borst, 24 How. Pr. N.Y., 246, 247—Gouraud v. Gouraud, 3 Redf.Surr. N.Y., 262, 267.

Different original meaning

When it is said that there must be privity of estate between the covenantor and the covenantee, all that is meant is that the covenant must impose such a burden on the land as to be in substance, or carry with it, a grant of an easement or quasi easement, or must be in aid of such a grant, but the expression "privity of estate" in this sense is of modern use, and has been carried over from the cases of warranty, where it was used with a wholly different meaning.—Norcross v. James, 2 N.E. 946, 948, 140 Mass. 188—15 C.J. p 1242 note 63.

not to a different estate in the same property;<sup>54</sup> and, in order to constitute one person a privy in estate to another, such other must be a predecessor in respect of the property in question, from whom the privy derives his right or title.<sup>55</sup> Thus one who acquires real estate pursuant to a tax sale is not in privity with the former owner<sup>56</sup> for the reason that there is no contractual relationship between them, and the owner does not grant the title, the purchaser being the grantee of the state.<sup>57</sup> Privies in estate strictly mean only those between whom there are certain rights and relations resulting from the estate held, and not from contract between them,<sup>58</sup> and privity in estate arises only between mutual or successive holders of title to the same right or interest in the same property,<sup>59</sup> and it denotes mutual or successive relationship<sup>60</sup> as to rights,<sup>61</sup> mutual or successive relation to the same right of property,<sup>62</sup> identity of title to an estate;<sup>63</sup> and it is not created by the receipt of a part of the product of an estate, for an interest in the estate itself is necessary to create such privity.<sup>64</sup>

The term "privity of estate" in some instances means only privity of possession,<sup>65</sup> and does not mean privity of title.<sup>66</sup>

Privity of estate is treated in Covenants § 58. For other references see the index to the title Landlord and Tenant.

Privity in both estate and contract denotes the privity between lessor and lessee.<sup>67</sup> Where both privity of contract and of estate exist, privity of estate may be destroyed, and the privity of contract remain.<sup>68</sup>

Privity in blood denotes the privity between heir and ancestor<sup>69</sup> and coparceners.<sup>70</sup> A privy in blood derives his title by descent.<sup>71</sup>

Privity or privies in law. Where the law, without privity of blood or estate, casts land upon another;<sup>72</sup> the privity in case of escheats.<sup>73</sup> Privies in law are such as the lord by escheat,<sup>74</sup> a tenant by curtesy<sup>75</sup> or in dower,<sup>76</sup> the incumbent of a benefice,<sup>77</sup> a husband suing or defending in right of

"Privity" in its relationship to estates

When the term "privity" is considered with respect to its relationship to estates in realty, it must be understood that it implies succession, that is, successive ownership or possession of the identical estate in the same property, and one who is in privity with another with respect to an estate stands in exactly the same position with respect thereto as did his predecessor in title; he takes the estate with all the burdens and benefits attending it.—Bailey v. Privy in deed. By a privy to a deed is meant a party to the deed or a legal representative of, or successor in title to, a party; the heirs, executors, administrators, or assigns of a party; what the French call the ayant causes.<sup>81</sup>

Privy of possession denotes merely a succession of relationship to the same thing.<sup>82</sup> The privy required for the tacking of adverse possessions into one continuous possession is privy of possession, and not necessarily privy of title, as stated in Adverse Possession § 129 b.

Privy of person denotes the privy between trustee and cestui que trust.<sup>83</sup>

Privy in representation denotes the privy between executor and testator<sup>84</sup> or between administrator and intestate.<sup>85</sup>

Privy in tenure denotes the privy between landlord and tenant.<sup>86</sup>

As an adjective, the words "privy" or "privacy" are defined as meaning admitted to the participation of knowledge with another of a secret transaction;<sup>87</sup> privately knowing;<sup>88</sup> secretly cognizant.<sup>89</sup> To be privy to an act means to be bound by it.<sup>90</sup>

§ 1. Definitions

A "prize fight" is a contest in which the contestants fight for a prize, reward, or wager.

The term "prize fight" had no technical meaning at common law.<sup>1</sup> It has been defined as a contest in which the contestants fight for a prize, reward, or wager;<sup>2</sup> a pugilistic encounter for a prize or wager;<sup>3</sup> and, according to some authorities, in public.<sup>4</sup> "Prize fighting" has been defined as the act or the practice of fighting for a prize;<sup>5</sup> fighting, especially boxing, in public for a reward or wager.<sup>6</sup>

A "prize fighter" has been defined as one who fights or boxes publicly for a reward;<sup>7</sup> one who fights publicly for a reward.<sup>8</sup>

"Glove contest" is a mere exhibition of skill in sparring with gloves, calculated not to do great bodily injury,<sup>9</sup> and indulged in for the purpose of recreation, exercise, and instruction,<sup>10</sup> and not for the purpose of introducing and exhibiting for a prize trained and professional prize fighters;<sup>11</sup> "glove contest" is distinguishable from "prize fight."<sup>12</sup>

stances the participants might be punishable for affray, as discussed in Affray § 1 c (2), assault and battery,<sup>14</sup> breach of the peace,<sup>15</sup> or riot.<sup>16</sup> At common law holding or engaging in a boxing or sparring match or contest is not necessarily illegal or an offense,<sup>17</sup> but the surrounding circumstances may be such as to render participants guilty of a breach of the peace.<sup>18</sup>

Various statutes have prohibited and defined as a criminal offense prize fighting and certain related acts,<sup>19</sup> and also engaging in a sparring exhibition within the state, at which an admission fee is charged, and certain related acts,<sup>20</sup> subject to the limitation sometimes imposed or recognized that such a statute does not apply to boxing or sparring exhibitions conducted under the regulation and supervision of the state athletic commission.<sup>21</sup> The view has been taken that such a statute, being in derogation of the common law, must be strictly construed.<sup>22</sup> A provision exempting from the operation of the criminal statute activities in a gymnasium or athletic club under certain circumstances does not apply where the contest is in fact a prize fight.<sup>23</sup>

Regulation of boxing or sparring contests is discussed in the C.J.S. title Theaters and Shows §§ 3, 4, also 50 C.J. p 412 notes 18, 19, 21, 22; 62 C.J. p 846 note 81.

Under a former federal statute, in order to constitute the offense of receiving a film or other pictorial representation of a prize fight from the mails or from a common carrier under certain circumstances, a transportation through the mails, as discussed in Post Office § 64, or by a common carrier was necessary,<sup>24</sup> but under a related provision of such statute a transportation by mail, as discussed in Post Office § 37, or by common carrier was not an essential element of the offense.<sup>25</sup>

b. Particular Elements

Generally the question as to what are the elements of the offense of prize fighting or of related offenses depends on the terms of the statute creating the offense; usually an intention on the part of the participants to attack one another physically and the expectation on their part of a prize or reward are essential.

It is usually held that one of the elements of a prize fight is an intention on the part of the participants to do physical violence to each other.<sup>26</sup> The mere fact that an injury may result incidentally in a boxing or sparring match does not make it a prize fight.<sup>27</sup> The mere fact, however, that it is a so-called friendly bout and for scientific points does not change the character of a contest which is in other respects a prize fight,<sup>28</sup> as anger or ill will on the part of the contestants is not a necessary element of the offense;<sup>29</sup> nor is it necessary that the contest be fought "to a finish," or, in other words, until one of the contestants be overcome.<sup>30</sup>

the statute makes it unlawful to engage in a fight in accordance with a previous appointment or arrangement, it is not material that the appointment or agreement be made at any particular length of time previous to the contest,<sup>31</sup> or in any particular form of words,<sup>32</sup> or in writing.<sup>33</sup> It is not material whether the agreement was made within the jurisdiction in which the fight was held and the prosecution instituted.<sup>34</sup>

Prize or reward. Generally, under statutes prohibiting prize fights, or boxing or sparring matches for a prize or reward, it is held that the contest must have been engaged in with an expectation of a prize or reward either to be won from a contestant or otherwise awarded.<sup>35</sup> It is not essential that the prize or reward be gained by the contestant from the other<sup>36</sup> or be awarded by a third person.<sup>37</sup> It may consist of money paid or contributed by the spectators<sup>38</sup> or of the proceeds of door or gate receipts.<sup>39</sup> It is immaterial that the defeated as well as the successful contestant is rewarded,<sup>40</sup> that the contestants are paid a specified sum,<sup>41</sup> that the reward is divided equally between them,<sup>42</sup> or that it is not in kind as to each contestant,<sup>43</sup> or even that the prize was not actually awarded.<sup>44</sup> It has been held that it is not essential that the prize or reward be won by one of the contestants.<sup>45</sup> Under some statutes prohibiting fighting in accordance with a previous arrangement or appointment, it seems that it is not necessary in order to constitute a violation that a fight should be for a prize or reward.<sup>46</sup>

Contest in public. Under some statutes only public contests are prohibited,<sup>47</sup> and a private contest, whether amateur or professional, although for a prize or wager, will not constitute an offense thereunder.<sup>48</sup> In some jurisdictions the statutes are construed to prohibit both public and private contests.<sup>49</sup>

Manner of conducting contest. The manner of conducting the contest may be consistent with a lawful or unlawful contest;<sup>50</sup> but, if the contest embraces the essential elements of a prize fight, various surrounding circumstances are not material,<sup>51</sup> as, for example, whether conducted with or without gloves<sup>52</sup> for a limited number of rounds only,<sup>53</sup> in a ring,<sup>54</sup> or before few or many spectators;<sup>55</sup> the clothing worn by the contestants;<sup>56</sup> the rules observed;<sup>57</sup> and precautions taken to safeguard the lives and persons of the contestants.<sup>58</sup> It has been said that boxing without gloves, for a display of skill and pastime, when there is no breach of the peace and no intentional injury to the person, is not embraced within a statute prohibiting prize fighting.<sup>59</sup>

§ 4. Indictment or Information

General rules as to the sufficiency of indictments and Informations apply to indictments or informations for prize fighting and related offenses.

In accordance with rules in criminal cases generally, stated in Indictments and Informations §§ 100, 130, 139, the indictment or information must sufficiently inform accused and the court of the offense accused is charged with having committed;<sup>61</sup> and it should set forth with reasonable precision and certainty all the elements necessary to constitute such offense.<sup>62</sup> It has been held or recognized that an indictment or information which charges the offense in the words of the statute is sufficient,<sup>63</sup> at least where the statute sets forth with precision and certainty all the elements necessary to constitute the offense,<sup>64</sup> although it is not necessary to follow the language of the statute if the acts constituting the offense are clearly described in the indictment.<sup>65</sup> The view has been taken, however, that where a statute makes engaging in prize fighting an offense, without further definition, it is essential to go beyond the terms of the statute by making allegations aptly charging the offense.<sup>66</sup> The necessity for an averment that the fight took place in public depends on whether publicity is an essential element of the crime.<sup>67</sup> Where the offense consists of engaging in a prize fight, it has been held that the indictment or information must show that both participants fought;<sup>68</sup> but the view has been taken that is sufficient to allege that accused engaged with another in a fight.<sup>69</sup> It is unnecessary to negative the existence of facts bringing the case within exceptions contained in a proviso in a statutory provision creating a different offense.<sup>70</sup>

§ 5. Evidence

Rules as to the admissibility, weight, and sufficiency of evidence applicable in criminal prosecutions generally apply in prosecutions for prize fighting and related offenses.

Rules as to the admissibility of evidence applicable in criminal prosecutions generally, stated in Criminal Law §§ 600-899, control as to the admissibility of evidence in prosecutions for prize fighting, or for engaging in unlawful boxing or sparring matches and exhibitions.<sup>71</sup> It has been held that it is not competent to show that contests of the type involved are common and harmless amusements in colleges,<sup>72</sup> and that the opinion of an expert as to whether the contest in question was a glove contest or a prize fight is not admissible.<sup>73</sup> The view has been taken that it is not error to refuse to allow the jury to examine the gloves used, as they furnish no criterion of the character of the contest,<sup>74</sup> or of how it was conducted,<sup>75</sup> although evidence that the contest was had with gloved hands has been held admissible,<sup>76</sup> as has evidence as to the kind, size, weight, and other characteristics of the gloves used.<sup>77</sup>

Rules as to the weight and sufficiency of evidence applicable in criminal prosecutions generally, stated in Criminal Law §§ 900-926, apply.<sup>78</sup> Circumstantial evidence may be sufficient to show a previous appointment or arrangement to hold a prize fight.<sup>79</sup>

§ 6. Trial and Review

In prosecution for prize fighting and related offenses, questions of fact are for the jury. Instructions should present to the jury the correct legal principles applicable and should properly point out the elements of the offense.

While the view has been expressed that what constitutes a prize fight may be a question of law,<sup>80</sup> it has been held or recognized that it is usually proper and necessary for the jury to determine under proper instructions whether a contest was a prize fight or a lawful glove contest,<sup>81</sup> whether an alleged club was only a sham and pretense,<sup>82</sup> and the sufficiency of the corroboration of an accomplice who testifies on a prosecution for aiding and abetting a prize fight.<sup>83</sup>

Since it is the purpose of instructions to define for the jury, and direct their attention to, the legal principles which apply to, and govern, the facts proved or presumed in the case,<sup>84</sup> an instruction in a prosecution for prize fighting is improper, where it fails to distinguish between a prize fight and a sparring exhibition,<sup>85</sup> or between a prize fight and other physical contests,<sup>86</sup> or where it fails to explain the conditions under which sparring exhibitions are permissible under a statute.<sup>87</sup> It has been held, under a statute making it unlawful to be a party to, or engage in, a prize fight, that a charge that does not instruct that a reward to be gained by the competition, either to be won from the contestant or otherwise awarded, and that an intention to inflict some degree of bodily harm on the contestant, are necessary elements to a prize fight, is improper.<sup>88</sup> The correctness of an instruction with respect to the public character of an exhibition may depend on the evidence.<sup>89</sup>

PRO. A Latin preposition meaning for; in respect of; on account of; in behalf of.<sup>1</sup> It has been held to be equivalent to, or synonymous with "for" see 36 C.J.S. p 1133 note 68.

This preposition is used as the introductory word of many Latin phrases.<sup>2</sup>

Pro rata. A Latin expression meaning, literally, "according to the rate."<sup>3</sup> It is so common in use and so frequently employed in daily intercourse among all classes of men that it may almost be said to have become a part of our vernacular,<sup>4</sup> and it is frequently used in statutes as well as in the opinions of learned judges and by text writers on various titles of the law.<sup>5</sup> While it has been said that the term has a double meaning,<sup>6</sup> it has also been said to have a clearly defined and well-understood meaning,<sup>7</sup> and that it is well understood by persons of ordinary intelligence to denote a disposition of a fund or sum indicated in proportion to some rate or standard, fixed in the mind of the person speaking or writing, manifested by the words spoken or written, according to which rate or standard the allowance is to be made or calculated.<sup>8</sup> However, it has no meaning unless referable to some rule or standard.<sup>9</sup> It never means, as applied to persons, equality, or an equal division; the term used necessarily implies an unequal division, as between different persons.<sup>10</sup>

The term "pro rata" has been defined as meaning according to a measure which fixes proportions.<sup>11</sup> The term "pro rata" has further been de-

acter,<sup>30</sup> or quality<sup>31</sup> of being probable; that which is probable;<sup>32</sup> appearance<sup>33</sup> of truth,<sup>34</sup> likelihood;<sup>35</sup> verisimilitude.<sup>36</sup>

"Probability" falls short of moral certainty, but produces what is called opinion.<sup>37</sup>

In the doctrine of chances, probability is the likelihood of the occurrence of an event, or the quotient obtained by dividing the number of favorable chances by the whole number of chances.<sup>38</sup>

In legal writings and opinions "assumption," "inference," "presumption," and "probability" have been said to have substantially the same meanings see Evidence § 115.

"Probability" has been distinguished from "likelihood" see 53 C.J.S. p 885 note 84, and "proof" see Evidence § 4, and from "certainty" in connection with the rule stated in Damages § 31 that there must exist a reasonable certainty that the apprehended future consequences will ensue from the original injury in order for damages to be awarded.

"Probability" is defined in Evidence § 1016; the weight of probabilities in civil actions is discussed in Evidence § 1021 b, and in criminal prosecutions in Criminal Law § 910. In connection with reasonable doubt as to the guilt of accused in criminal prosecutions, instructions as to probability of innocence are discussed in Criminal Law § 1282. Probabilities supporting an award or finding in compensation proceedings see the C.J.S. title Workmen's Compensation Acts § 547, also 71 C.J. p 1085 notes 32-35.

For references to other particular applications in civil actions consult the index to the title Evidence.

PROBABLE. The term "probable" is used to refer to past or future occurrences and to human judgments about those occurrences.<sup>39</sup> It implies more than a mere possibility,<sup>40</sup> and more than mere conjecture.<sup>41</sup> It connotes being so supported by evidence as to incline the mind to belief rather than disbelief, yet leaving room for doubt.<sup>42</sup> When applied to past occurrences it may be said to be used inaccurately because accomplished facts are always certain and never merely probable.<sup>43</sup> In common acceptance, when applied to a condition which may be supposed beforehand, the word implies that we know facts enough about the condition supposed to make us reasonably confident of it, or, at the least, that the evidence preponderates in its favor.<sup>44</sup>

"Probable" is defined as meaning having more evidence for than against;<sup>45</sup> having more evidence than the contrary;<sup>46</sup> supported by evidence which inclines the mind to belief, but leaves some room for doubt;<sup>47</sup> capable of being proved.<sup>48</sup>

It is also defined as meaning likely;<sup>49</sup> appearing to be founded in reason;<sup>50</sup> that which is most consonant with reason;<sup>51</sup> having the appearance of truth,<sup>52</sup> of reality and truth.<sup>53</sup>

"Probable" has been held to be synonymous with "apparent" see 3 C.J.S. p 1427 note 87.1, "liable" see 53 C.J.S. p 22 note 41, "likely" see 53 C.J.S. p 886 note 40, and "reasonable."<sup>54</sup> It has also been held that there is no substantial difference between "probable" and "reasonable,"<sup>55</sup> and that "reasonable," "satisfactory," and "probable" all mean substantially the same.<sup>56</sup>

"Probable" has been compared with, or distinguished from, "evenly balanced" see 31 C.J.S. p 472 note 2, "likely" see 53 C.J.S. p 886 note 2, "natural" see 65 C.J.S. p 40 note 38, and "possible" see ante p 245 note 21.

As used in connection with testimony, "probable" involves the idea of preponderance of evidence see Criminal Law § 900.

PROBANZA. In Spanish law, proof.<sup>62</sup>

PROBATE. The real meaning of the word "probate" is proof,<sup>63</sup> and originally it meant relating to proof,<sup>64</sup> although somewhat later it came to signify relating to proof of wills,<sup>65</sup> but in American law<sup>66</sup> it is now a general term used to include all matters of which probate courts have jurisdiction.<sup>67</sup>

In common usage, the term "probate" is often applied to any of the incidents of administration of a decedent's estate as stated in Executors and Administrators § 3 f; but in its strict sense, as applied to proof of wills, the term is defined in the C.J.S. title Wills § 307, also 68 C.J. p 873 notes 86-92.

The terms have been held to be synonymous with "case" see Actions § 1 b (1), and "cause" see Actions § 1 c (1), and also have been held synonymous with, or have been distinguished from, "action," "judgment," "process," "prosecution," and "suit" see Actions § 1 h (1) (b).

regarded as a mercantile term,<sup>92</sup> and it is not used in the same sense as the verb "proceed" as stated ante p 971 note 83.

The word "proceeds" is without any fixed or definite meaning,<sup>93</sup> although etymologically it means something that comes forth or issues from a source or origin, as, for example, something that arises or accrues from some possession or transaction.<sup>94</sup> It is a word of equivocal import<sup>95</sup> and of great generality,<sup>96</sup> having many meanings and varied usages,<sup>97</sup> and of varying<sup>98</sup> and loose<sup>99</sup> significance.

It is frequently employed with different meanings,<sup>1</sup> and very often is of doubtful meaning,<sup>2</sup> although it has been said that the word has a usual, well-known, and general signification.<sup>3</sup> Its meaning in each case depends on its context,<sup>4</sup> and depends very much on the connection in which it is employed and the subject matter to which it is applied.<sup>5</sup>

The word "proceeds" has been variously defined,<sup>6</sup> and as generally defined and understood<sup>7</sup> it means the amount proceeding or accruing from some possession or transaction,<sup>8</sup> and this has been said to be the best definition of the term.<sup>9</sup>

The term is also defined as meaning issue;<sup>10</sup> produce;<sup>11</sup> product;<sup>12</sup> rent;<sup>13</sup> yield.<sup>14</sup> It also means the useful or material results of the action or course;<sup>15</sup> the sum derived from the disposal of goods or work, or from the use of capital.<sup>16</sup>

The term "proceeds" is frequently employed with reference to sales,<sup>17</sup> and in this connection is defined as meaning the amount realized from the sale of property;<sup>18</sup> the amount derived from the sale of sale.<sup>28</sup> It has been held not to mean invoice.<sup>29</sup>

"Proceeds" may refer either to net receipts or to gross receipts,<sup>30</sup> and is frequently interpreted as denoting income,<sup>31</sup> and in this sense it may mean the net returns after the payment of necessary expenses.<sup>32</sup> It has been held to mean and include money,<sup>33</sup> and money easily comes within the definition of the term.<sup>34</sup> However, the word does not necessarily mean money<sup>35</sup> or cash;<sup>36</sup> and it is not restricted in meaning to money only,<sup>37</sup> or to money actually recovered,<sup>38</sup> but it may include notes<sup>39</sup> and securities.<sup>40</sup>

When lands are the subject matter to which it is to be applied, if the title is disposed of, that which is received, whether money or other lands, is properly called the "proceeds;"<sup>41</sup> if the land is retained, and not disposed of, that which it produces by way of rents or issues constitutes the "proceeds."<sup>42</sup> In its ordinary acceptance,<sup>43</sup> when applied to the income to be derived from real estate, the word embraces the idea of issues, rents and profits, or produce,<sup>44</sup> and has been held to include the increase in value of live stock or produce.<sup>45</sup>

"Proceeds" has been held equivalent to, or synonymous with, "avails" see 7 C.J.S. p 1301 note 77, "harvest" see 39 C.J.S. p 779 note 29, "income" see 42 C.J.S. p 534 note 26, "product,"<sup>46</sup> "receipts," "returns," and "yield."<sup>47</sup>

testamentary instruments and the various constructions which have been given the term when used in this connection are discussed in the C.J.S. title Wills §§ 770, 779, also 69 C.J. p 386 notes 52-55 and p 396 notes 51-62.

The right to proceeds of insurance generally is discussed in Insurance §§ 1140-1193. See also the index to that title. Insurance proceeds as taxable income by the federal government see Internal Revenue § 114, and as subject to federal and state inheritance, succession, or estate tax see Internal Revenue § 486 and the C.J.S. title Taxation §§ 1118, 1149, 1158, also 61 C.J. p 1609 notes 16, 17, p 1670 note 32-p 1671 note 39, and p 1677 note 77.

Disposition of the proceeds of a state income tax is treated in the C.J.S. title Taxation § 1110, also 61 C.J. p 1589 note 77-p 1590 note 88; disposition of proceeds of sale of land for taxes see the C.J.S. title Taxation §§ 816-818, also 61 C.J. p 1212 note 23-p 1215 note 57.

Application of the proceeds of mortgages and of the proceeds of sale on foreclosure is treated in Mortgages §§ 297, 595-598.

As a legal term, "process" is a generic word<sup>62</sup> of very comprehensive signification<sup>63</sup> and many meanings.<sup>64</sup> In its broadest sense, it embraces all the steps and proceedings in a cause from its commencement to its conclusion,<sup>65</sup> and is defined as meaning the whole course of proceeding.<sup>66</sup> In its narrower sense, it is the means of compelling the defendant to appear in court, and in this sense the term is defined in Process § 1.

"Process" has been held equivalent to, or synonymous with, "art" see 6 C.J.S. p 772 note 13, "manufacture" see Manufactures § 1 a (4), "proceedings" see Actions § 1 h (1) (b), and "procedure" see Process § 1.

It has been compared with, or distinguished from, "product"<sup>67</sup> and "reagent."<sup>68</sup>

As a verb, the word "process" is defined as meaning to subject to or treat by a special process;<sup>69</sup> to prepare by an artificial or special process.<sup>70</sup> It is further defined as meaning to subject, especially raw materials, to a process of manufacture, development, preparation for the market, etc.; to convert into marketable form, as live stock by slaughtering, milk by pasteurizing, fruits and vegetables by sorting and repacking,<sup>71</sup> and the courts have generally accepted this definition.<sup>72</sup>

Phrases employing the word "process" are set out in the note.<sup>73</sup>

Processing is a flexible term and may refer to either chemical or physical changes in the thing acted upon.<sup>74</sup> It is defined as meaning a course or method of operations; a series of actions, motions or occurrences; progressive act or continuous operation or treatment; an action, operation, or method of treatment applying to something; a series of eration or series of operations.—Bald Mountain Mining Co. v. Welsh, supra.

(1) In General

The term "process" in its broadest sense is equivalent to "procedure," and, in a narrow sense, it is limited to judicial writs in an action or writs or writings issued from or out of a court under the seal thereof and returnable thereto.

The term "process" is not limited to "summons."<sup>1</sup> In its broadest sense it is equivalent to, or synonymous with, "procedure."<sup>2</sup> Sometimes the term is also broadly defined as the means whereby a court compels a compliance with its demands.<sup>3</sup>

"Process" and "writ" or "writs" are synonymous<sup>4</sup>

"Writ" defined see the C.J.S. definition Writ, also 71 C.J. p 1625 note 51 et seq.

Words "original writ" include declaration with notice to plead attached or indorsed when used to take the

in the sense that every writ is a process,<sup>5</sup> and in a narrow sense of the term "process" is limited to judicial writs in an action,<sup>6</sup> or at least to writs or writings issued from or out of a court,<sup>7</sup> under the seal thereof<sup>8</sup> and returnable thereto;<sup>9</sup> but it is not always necessary to construe the term so strictly as to limit it to a writ<sup>10</sup> issued by a court in the exercise of its ordinary jurisdiction.<sup>11</sup> The term is sometimes defined as a writ or other formal writing issued by authority of law<sup>12</sup> or by some court, body, or official having authority to issue it;<sup>13</sup> and it is frequently used to designate a means, by writ or otherwise, of acquiring jurisdiction of defendant<sup>14</sup> or his property,<sup>15</sup> or of bringing defendant into,<sup>16</sup> or compelling him to appear in,<sup>17</sup> court to answer.<sup>18</sup>

Meaning of "process" as employed in statutes. As employed in statutes the legal meaning of the word "process" varies according to the context, subject matter, and spirit of the statute in which it occurs.<sup>19</sup> In some jurisdictions codes or statutes variously define "process" as signifying or including all writs, warrants, summonses, and orders of courts of justice or judicial officers,<sup>20</sup> or any writ, declaration, summons, order, or subpoena whereby any action, suit, or proceeding shall be commenced, or which shall be issued in or on any action, suit, or proceeding.<sup>21</sup>

As employed in this title, and as sometimes defined, the term designates the writ or other formal writing, issued by authority of law, for the purpose of bringing defendant into a court of law to answer plaintiff's demands in a civil action.<sup>22</sup>

him into court to answer.<sup>26</sup>

On the other hand, "process" has been held not to include certain notices,<sup>27</sup> as, for example, a notice given as a condition precedent to a right of action,<sup>28</sup> a notice to a garnishee,<sup>29</sup> a notice to a warrantor requesting him to defend,<sup>30</sup> notice in condemnation<sup>31</sup> or partition<sup>32</sup> proceedings, or notice of an appeal.<sup>33</sup>

Notice of sale or application therefor. In some cases it has been held that the word "process" includes a guardian's notice of application to sell his ward's land;<sup>34</sup> but in other cases it has been asserted that notices in proceedings by executors, administrators, and guardians to sell real estate are not process.<sup>35</sup> Likewise in some jurisdictions notice of a tax sale is deemed to be in the nature of process;<sup>36</sup> but in other jurisdictions notices relating to the sale and conveyance of land for taxes are declared not to be process.<sup>37</sup>

(b) Pleadings

Process is not part of a plaintiff's pleading; it does not include a petition, complaint, information or indictment.

Process is not part of the pleading of a plaintiff.<sup>38</sup> Various papers have been held not to be embraced within the meaning of the term "proc-

While a declaration in actions commenced without writ, by filing and service of a declaration, is in the nature of process,<sup>45</sup> it is not process in a strict sense or for all purposes.<sup>46</sup>

(c) Rule, Order, or Decree

A rule, order, or decree generally is included within the term "process", although certain rules, orders, and decrees have been held not to be included within the term.

It has been stated generally that process embraces a rule,<sup>47</sup> order,<sup>48</sup> or decree,<sup>49</sup> and it has been specifically held that it embraces a rule or order to commit.<sup>50</sup> Process does not, however, necessarily embrace every order, as discussed in Motions and Orders § 2 b, and it has been specifically held that it does not include an order in the federal courts for the appearance of an absent defendant, as considered in Federal Courts § 125 c, an order for the holding of a local option election,<sup>51</sup> or a decree enjoining a nuisance.<sup>52</sup> An order directed to the sheriff and indorsed by plaintiff on an affidavit is not strictly within the definition of the term "process."<sup>53</sup> firmed<sup>54</sup> and denied<sup>55</sup> that an order or decree of sale is process.

(d) Execution

An execution generally is included in the term "process," although under particular statutes an execution may not be embraced by the term.

"Process" includes an "execution,"<sup>56</sup> at least in a broad sense;<sup>57</sup> but a particular statute may be so worded as clearly to indicate a legislative purpose to draw a distinction between the two words and to use the former in a narrow and restricted sense which does not include the latter.<sup>58</sup>

(e) Other Matters

Various matters have been regarded as "process," such as a subpoena or citation, a bond in a criminal case, and the drawing of a grand jury.

Process has been held to include various matters,<sup>59</sup> such as the proceedings in claim and delivery which authorize a sheriff to take property,<sup>60</sup> a subpoena,<sup>61</sup> a tax book authenticated by the seal of the court under which a tax collector is authorized by statute to seize and sell property to enforce a collection of taxes,<sup>62</sup> and a writ or order of attachment.<sup>63</sup> A proceeding for the enforcement of a mechanic's lien is in effect a process.<sup>64</sup>

On the other hand, process has been held not to include various other matters,<sup>65</sup> as, for example, the caption of the docket of a justice of the peace<sup>66</sup> or the record entries of a case before him,<sup>67</sup> a certificate stating the finding and action of a judicial officer,<sup>68</sup> a commission to examine witnesses,<sup>69</sup> a memorial to a court,<sup>70</sup> a motion by the attorney general,<sup>71</sup> a precept under which a sale of land for nonpayment of taxes is made,<sup>72</sup> a proclamation calling an election,<sup>73</sup> and a writ of inquiry.<sup>74</sup>

Bond, undertaking, or recognizance. Process includes a bond or recognizance taken in a criminal case,<sup>75</sup> but not a bond in replevin<sup>76</sup> or an appeal bond, undertaking, or recognizance.<sup>77</sup>

Drawing and list of jurors. It has been held that "process" includes the drawing of a grand jury<sup>78</sup> and a list of grand and petit jurors who have been selected,<sup>79</sup> but it has also been held not to include a list of a special venire.<sup>80</sup>

Record or registry of judgment has been held to be within a broad sense of the term "process" as used in some statutes.<sup>81</sup>

Cost or fee bill. Some courts hold that the term "process" includes a fee bill,<sup>82</sup> but other courts hold that a cost bill cannot be regarded as process.<sup>83</sup>

Civil process is a writ or order issued in a civil action.<sup>84</sup>

The term "civil process," includes various matters,<sup>85</sup> such as a writ of garnishment<sup>86</sup> and a writ of assistance on a fieri facias for costs.<sup>87</sup> As used in some statutes, and at least for the limited purpose of bringing the cause before another court, "process in civil actions" includes an appeal from a probate court.<sup>88</sup>

Compulsory process. "Compulsory process" is such coercive means as the courts, by virtue of their inherent powers or sanction of the law, are permitted to employ.<sup>89</sup>

c. Legal or Lawful Process; Process of Law

Legal process is process fair on its face and in fact valid.

"Legal process" has been variously defined as process fair on its face<sup>90</sup> and in fact valid;<sup>91</sup> a process issued in virtue of, and pursuant to, law;<sup>92</sup> and process which is not defective and has issued in the ordinary course of justice from a court or magistrate having jurisdiction of the subject matter.<sup>93</sup> While the term may mean all the proceedings in an action,<sup>94</sup> it is not always used in this sense, but rather in the sense of a "writ."<sup>95</sup>

The term "legal process" has been held to include various matters<sup>96</sup> as, for example, an order directing a sale of real property<sup>97</sup> and the statutory process of supplemental proceedings.<sup>98</sup> On the other hand, the term has been held not to include other

Lawful process. Lawful process is notice the proper service of which on defendant clothes the court with jurisdiction to hear and determine the cause.<sup>2</sup> The term includes a citation<sup>3</sup> and a subpoena.<sup>4</sup>

"Ordinary process of law," as used in some statutes, does not mean ordinary personal judgment and execution, but rather such process as is adapted to enforce a lien or specific charge on property specially assessed.<sup>5</sup>

"Under process of law" does not describe an entry on mortgaged premises by the mortgagee on voluntary surrender.<sup>6</sup>

d. Original, Mesne, and Final Process

Process has been divided into, and designated as, "original," "mesne," and "final," although in some jurisdictions process has come to be indicated by only two terms, "mesne" and "final".

In some instances process has been divided into, and designated as, "original," "mesne," and "final."<sup>7</sup> Strictly speaking, "original process" is the process which originates a cause,<sup>8</sup> as distinguished from process which prolongs an action already begun<sup>9</sup> or which is appellate in its nature.<sup>10</sup> "Mesne process" is intervening<sup>11</sup> or intermediate<sup>12</sup> process, and embraces all writs and orders of court necessary for the carrying on of the suit after its institution by original process and up to, but not including, final process.<sup>13</sup> "Final process" comprehends those writs which are necessary to secure to the successful party the benefit of the suit.<sup>14</sup>

In a number of jurisdictions process has come to be indicated by only two terms, "mesne" and "final,"<sup>15</sup> and "mesne process" is employed as embracing all writs preceding execution or final process,<sup>16</sup> including the process by which a suit is commenced,<sup>17</sup> defendant is brought into court,<sup>18</sup> or property is seized in admiralty proceedings in rem.<sup>19</sup>

e. Defective, Void, Voidable, or Irregular Process

"Void process," as distinguished from "voidable" or "irregular" process, is such as the court has no power to award, or has not acquired jurisdiction to issue in a particular case, or which fails to comply with legal requisites, or which loses its vitality in consequence of noncompliance with a condition subsequent.

"Defective process" is of two classes, namely, void and voidable.<sup>20</sup> "Void process" is such as the court has no power to award,<sup>21</sup> or has not acquired jurisdiction to issue in the particular case,<sup>22</sup> or which fails in some material respect to comply in form with the legal requisites of process,<sup>23</sup> or which loses its validity in consequence of noncompliance with a condition subsequent, obedience to which is rendered essential;<sup>24</sup> and it is an absolute nullity from the beginning.<sup>25</sup>

"Voidable process" includes all defective process where the defect is of such nature that it is capable of being amended.<sup>26</sup>

"Irregular process" is such as a court has general jurisdiction to issue, but which is unauthorized in the particular case by reason of the existence or nonexistence of some fact or circumstance rendering it improper in such a case.<sup>27</sup> While "irregular process" has been defined as meaning process which is absolutely null and void,<sup>28</sup> it is said that usually the term has been applied to all processes not issued in strict conformity with the law,<sup>29</sup> whether the defects appear on the face of the process or by reference to extrinsic facts,<sup>30</sup> and whether such defects render the process absolutely void or only voidable.<sup>31</sup>

(2) Summons; Citation

A summons is a means whereby the defendant is notified to appear at the proper time and place to answer the complaint against him and in some jurisdictions is regarded as process.

The word "summons" in connection with process has been variously defined,<sup>38</sup> as, for example, the first process in the institution of an action whereby defendant is notified to appear at the proper time and place to answer the complaint against him;<sup>39</sup> the process whereby parties defendant are brought into court so as to give the court jurisdiction of their person;<sup>40</sup> the process by which defendant is summoned to court;<sup>41</sup> a means supplied by the law to the assertion of jurisdiction;<sup>42</sup> a notice to bring a party into court;<sup>43</sup> a notice required to be given to defendant by plaintiff so that defendant may know where to meet plaintiff in order to present and protect himself against the claim;<sup>44</sup> and a means of notifying defendant of the suit and ordering him to appear in court.<sup>45</sup> It has also been described as the instrument running in the name of the state, issuing out of the court having jurisdiction of the action, directed to a ministerial officer, commanding him

(2) Monition is a process in the nature of summons.—St. Louis v. Richeson, 76 Mo. 470, 484.

"Notice of motion," is substitute for writ and declaration in common-law actions, and notifies defendant when and where he is to appear and sets forth cause of complaint.—Baldwin v. Norton Hotel, 175 S.E. 751, 163 Va. 78.

"Process issued on any final judgment" does not include an order of commitment, issued by an examining magistrate, to hold a prisoner for trial.—Ex parte Crowell, 264 P. 642, 39 Okl.Cr. 201—50 C.J. p 446 note 77.

"Process requiring the arrest of any person" is process that commands restraint of the person.—Webster v. Bennett, 226 N.W. 684, 247 Mich. 616—50 C.J. p 446 note 78.

33. "Color of process" is a process sufficient in form and apparently valid.—Barfield v. Turner, 8 S.E. 115, 101 N.C. 357—11 C.J. p 1227 note 39.

34. "Judicial process"

In its narrower sense, the means of compelling defendant to appear in court for suing out the original writ in civil and, after indictment, criminal cases.—State v. Guilbert, 47 N.E. 651, 56 Ohio St. 575, 60 Am. S.R. 756, 38 L.R.A. 519—34 C.J. p 1185 note 65.

35. "Process of court" clearly includes a proceeding to set off one judgment against another.—Atkinson v. Pittman, 2 S.W. 114, 47 Ark. 464.

36. "Returnable process"

A term used to designate process on which the officer receiving it is bound to certify his doings.—Utica City Bank v. Buell, 9 Abb.Pr., N.Y., 385, 17 How.Pr. 498.

37. "Summary process"

(1) Process is summary when it is immediate or instantaneous and emanates and takes effect without intermediate applications or delays.—Gaines v. Travis, D.C.N.Y., 9 F. Cas.No.5,180, Abb.Adm. 422.

(2) Summary process cannot be extended beyond cases expressly authorized by law.—Adams v. Ross Amusement Co., 161 So. 601, 182 La. 252—Foret v. Stark, La.App., 16 So. 2d 79.

(3) An action for restitution of property by summary process does not lie.—Foret v. Stark, supra.

(4) A litigant cannot, by coupling a summary action with an ordinary action, deprive defendant of his right to have the ordinary action instituted legally through service of the petition and citation and not by rule or summary process.—In re A. A. Auto Wrecking Co., 200 So. 16, 196 La. 722—Dunlap v. Ramsey & Dunlap, 184 So. 710, 191 La. 158.

(5) Right to summary process implies pendency of suit between parties and is confined to incidental matters arising during the contestation, except where summary proceeding is expressly allowed by law.—Foret v. Stark, supra.

38. S.C.—Lybrand v. State Co., 184 S.E. 580, 179 S.C. 208, 104 A.L.R. 1118.

90. In Texas

(1) Under express provisions of Rev.St. 1925 art 2224, and prior statutes, waiver of process may not be executed prior to filing of suit.—Bragdon v. Wright, Tex.Civ.App., 142 S.W.2d 703, error dismissed—O'Neal defendant waives process, the necessity of process is dispensed with<sup>91</sup> and the case stands in court as though process had issued.<sup>92</sup> Defendant's right to defend is not impaired by such a waiver.<sup>93</sup>

Effect of process. Where defendant has been duly brought into court by summons or other process, he is, in legal contemplation, in court until the action is disposed of<sup>94</sup> or he is otherwise discharged according to law;<sup>95</sup> and, generally speaking, he is in court for all purposes connected with the action<sup>96</sup> and is required to take notice of all subsequent steps and proceedings.<sup>97</sup> However, defendant is not bound to keep watch for new causes of action to which he was not summoned to answer.<sup>98</sup>

§ 3. — To Make, Substitute, or Strike Party

In the absence of a voluntary appearance, a person named in the record as a party is not in fact a party to the action, unless he has been duly brought in by legal process.

A person named in the record as a party is not in fact a party to the action, unless he has been duly brought in by legal process<sup>99</sup> or has voluntarily appeared and submitted himself to the jurisdiction of the court.<sup>1</sup> However, personal service of process is not necessary to make one a party defendant, even though personal service of process or a voluntary appearance is a prerequisite to a personal judgment.<sup>2</sup>

Substitution of party. New or additional process may not be necessary on the substitution of a party plaintiff,<sup>3</sup> unless an entirely different plaintiff is substituted.<sup>4</sup> In the absence of a voluntary appearance, process ordinarily must issue and be served on the party substituted where a party defendant is substituted.<sup>5</sup> In some instances, however, there may be a substitution of a party as defendant without service of process,<sup>6</sup> as, for exam-

Amendment not subjecting additional property to suit

Under some statutes, it is expressly provided that whenever a petition thereon has been duly served by publication, plaintiff may, at any time prior to entering the decree, by leave of court file amended and supplemental pleadings which do not subject additional property to said suit without the necessity of reciting defendant.—Broughton v. Humble Oil & Refining Co., Tex.Civ.App., 105 S.W.2d 480, error refused.

Severance of tort and equity action
Where pursuant to statute a tort is not necessary on the filing of an amendment which does not set up a new cause of action.

An amended statement of the same cause of action does not necessitate the issuance and service of further or new process;<sup>13</sup> but if a new cause of action is set up by amendment new process must issue,<sup>14</sup> at least where defendant has not answered the original pleading or otherwise appeared in the action.<sup>15</sup> New process is not essential where defendant has answered the amended<sup>16</sup> petition or where he has waived issuance of process on the amended pleading;<sup>17</sup> and it has been held that where defendant has pleaded to the action, or otherwise entered an appearance therein, he is charged with notice of all amendments thereafter filed, including amendments which set up a new cause of action, and new process is not necessary.<sup>18</sup>

Amendment as to maturity of note. Where the original petition alleges the existence and non-maturity of a note and an amendment alleging the maturity and nonpayment of the note is authorized by a code provision, a summons on the amended petition is not necessary.<sup>19</sup>

Amendment after sustaining demurrer. On allowing an amendment after sustaining a demurrer to a petition, the court may order defendant to answer without further process.<sup>20</sup>

Lack of appearance or personal service. If any of defendants have not appeared, and the complaint is amended, it is necessary in a few jurisdictions that a summons be issued on the amended complaint and be served on such defendants.<sup>21</sup> In other jurisdictions, however, it has been held that, where defendant has been served only by publication and has not appeared, further and proper notice or process is necessary after a material amendment of plaintiff's pleading,<sup>22</sup> but not after a mere formal amendment.<sup>23</sup>

Amendment to answer. No process is necessary on filing an amendment to an answer which contains only defensive matter,<sup>24</sup> but new process is necessary where, after the entry of an order for judgment, defendant seeks to set up a wholly independent action as an amendment to the answer.<sup>25</sup>

Supplemental pleading. While no new summons or similar process ordinarily is needed for a supplemental petition,<sup>26</sup> where a pleading which plaintiff calls a supplemental complaint is in effect the institution of a new action, the issuance and service of summons are necessary.<sup>27</sup>

b. Cross Pleading

Unless required by statute, additional process on the plaintiff or a codefendant is not necessary where the defendant files a cross pleading against either of them.

Where defendant files a cross pleading, no additional process is necessary as to the original plaintiff, and statutes sometimes expressly so provide,<sup>28</sup> although in some jurisdictions original process must be served on plaintiff,<sup>29</sup> unless he waives process or enters an appearance as to the cross action.<sup>30</sup> A person impleaded by a garnishee for the sole purpose of having him assert his claim to a fund is not required to take notice of a cross action for damages by plaintiff against him.<sup>31</sup> Under some statutes, where defendants assert a counterclaim and pray affirmative relief,

Note given in satisfaction of judgment

Actual service of process, on a second amended petition, at a later term of court, to enforce a second note executed in satisfaction of a consent judgment was not necessary, where on the first petition service was had, and the defendant entered an appearance.—McKinney v. Wheeler, 3 Ky.Opin. 208.

Disregard of corporate fiction

Where a corporation is organized and used by a person as a subterfuge, in an action by the corporation to which a counterclaim is filed against such person, no new process is needed to bring such person into court.—Clermont-Minnesota Country Club v. Coupland, 143 So. 133, 106 Fla. 111, 84 A.L.R. 1354.

Where tenants in common sued cotenants for accounting for rents and profits, cotenants' cross action for partition of common property by sale is germane to original suit, and hence service need not be made on plaintiffs as prerequisite to jurisdiction.—Lankford v. Millhollin, 28 S.E. 2d 752, 197 Ga. 227.

Reconventional demand against intervenor

Nonresidents who intervened in attachment suit and ruled attaching creditor into court to determine question of ownership of property were not required to be cited to give court jurisdiction of attaching creditor's demand in reconvention, and order dismissing intervenors, as far as it related to reconventional demand, was erroneous.—Adams v. Ross Amusement Co., App., 158 So. 38, affirmed 161 So. 601, 182 La. 252.

Prior to, or after, nonsuit

(1) It has been held that where defendant files a pleading asking for affirmative relief after plaintiff has taken a nonsuit, a citation is necessary, but a citation is not necessary when defendant's claim for affirmative relief has been filed prior to the taking of a nonsuit by plaintiff.—Thompson v. Gaither, Tex.Civ.App., 45 S.W.2d 1106, error refused.—Davis v. Wichita State Bank & Trust Co., Tex.Civ.App., 286 S.W. 584.

30. Tex.—Waco Hilton Hotel Co. v. Waco Development Co., Civ.App., 75 S.W.2d 968, error dismissed.

Acts constituting waiver

Plaintiff did not waive issuance and service of citation on cross action by entering into stipulation respecting introduction of evidence, where stipulation was executed before plaintiff took nonsuit; signing of stipulation invoked no ruling of court, and it was not filed by plaintiff's attorney.—Lindsey v. Ferguson, Tex.Civ.App., 80 S.W.2d 407.

process is needed to bring in persons who are not parties.<sup>32</sup>

Codefendants. Where defendant files a cross pleading, generally speaking, new or additional process is not necessary as to a codefendant who has been properly served or has entered a general appearance in the original action.<sup>33</sup> However, such process is necessary when expressly required by statute<sup>34</sup> and, according to some authorities additional process on a codefendant is necessary,<sup>35</sup> at least where the cross complaint raises new questions against codefendant,<sup>36</sup> unless the codefendant has appeared<sup>37</sup> or answered<sup>38</sup> in the main or original suit.

In some jurisdictions, the issuance and service of additional process after the filing of a cross complaint are not necessary to confer jurisdiction to determine the relations of codefendants incidental to the subject matter of plaintiff's complaint;<sup>39</sup> but, in other jurisdictions, a call in warranty must be served on a codefendant.<sup>40</sup>

Service of cross pleading is, in some jurisdictions, necessary and sufficient as to persons who have been made parties to, and served with process in, the original suit;<sup>41</sup> but a defendant who has not appeared and has not been served with process cannot be compelled to litigate a question with a codefendant by the mere service on him of an answer setting up a cross demand.<sup>42</sup>

Effect of lack of process. It is not improper to proceed with the trial without the appearance or presence of a person against whom and plaintiff a cross complaint has been filed where no order making such person a party to the action has been sought, or no summons has issued on the cross complaint or has been served on such person, and his presence is not necessary to a full determination of the controversy.<sup>43</sup>

§ 5. Issuance

Process is to be issued in such manner as the statute directs and it is usually deemed to be issued when it is prepared and placed in the hands of a person authorized to serve it with the intention of having it served.

All the essential requisites of the statute must be substantially complied with in issuing process under statutory authority.<sup>44</sup> Mere preparation of the process by the clerk is not an issuance of it.<sup>45</sup>

Mere clerical preparation, dating, and attestation do not constitute issuance.—Snell v. Knowles, Tex.Civ. App., 87 S.W.2d 871, error dismissed.

Process is generally deemed issued when it is prepared and placed in the hands of a person authorized to serve it with the intention of having it served,<sup>46</sup> or at least when it is given to an officer, or to some one else to be given to the officer, for the purpose of being served.<sup>47</sup> Process is not irregular if delivered by the clerk, signed and sealed in blank, to plaintiff's attorney.<sup>48</sup>

Issuance by plaintiff or attorney. Where a summons or other process may be issued by plaintiff or his attorney, it may be considered issued when it has been duly drawn and signed, with intent to deliver it to the process server, although it may not have been actually delivered.<sup>49</sup>

§ 6. — Authority and Duty to Issue Generally

The issuance of process is a ministerial act and process is to be issued by such person or officer as may be designated by statute.

The issuance of a summons or other process is not a judicial act,<sup>50</sup> but is rather a ministerial act or duty.<sup>51</sup> Process is to be issued by such person or officer as may be designated by statute<sup>52</sup> and process issued by a person or officer without authority is void.<sup>53</sup> There can be no legal service

Process must be either served or delivered to proper officer for service to constitute an issuance.—Borden v. Corty, 232 N.W. 512, 181 Minn. 349.

Statute as declaratory of common law

Statute requiring that summons be placed in hands of sheriff or some other person authorized to serve it or service was merely declaratory of common law, making delivery of summons to sheriff necessary for its issuance, so that later statute eliminating such requirement did not repeal common-law rule, but left it more clearly in force.—Woodstock v. Whitaker, 146 P.2d 779, 62 Nev. 24.

Issue defined

(1) The word "issue" in relation to process has acquired a definite meaning.—McIntosh v. Standard Oil Co., 236 N.W. 152, 121 Neb. 92.

(2) It means going out of the hands of the clerk, expressed or implied, to be delivered to the sheriff or service.

Feb.—McIntosh v. Standard Oil Co., supra.

ex.—Corpus Juris cited in Snell v. Knowles, Civ.App., 87 S.W.2d 871, 877.

(3) A writ or notice is issued when it is put in proper form and placed in an officer's hands for service; at the time it becomes a perfected process.

(1) Feelings of judge as to merits of case do not justify refusal to have process issued.—State ex rel. Hurd v. Davis, 82 N.E.2d 82, 226 Ind. 526.

(2) The need by the court of additional time to consider a motion to dismiss the action is not a valid excuse for refusal to have process issued where the court has no authority to dismiss an action not yet lawfully commenced by the issuance of process.—State ex rel. Hurd v. Davis, supra.

of process unless the process purporting to show service was issued by proper authority.<sup>54</sup>

Process usually may be, and is, issued by the clerk of court<sup>55</sup> or his deputy,<sup>56</sup> and, except in some jurisdictions,<sup>57</sup> the clerk or other officer authorized to issue process may issue it in a proceeding in his own behalf.<sup>58</sup> Where a court lacks jurisdiction, it cannot issue valid process.<sup>59</sup>

Necessity of order from court. In the absence of a statutory requirement, process may be issued by the officer designated by law, such as the clerk of court, without any order from the court or judge.<sup>60</sup>

Issuance by plaintiff or attorney. Under some statutes process is issued by plaintiff or his attorney.<sup>61</sup>

Action brought in wrong district. Where the court is not absolutely without jurisdiction of an action brought in the wrong district but may try the action unless defendant exercises his privilege of having it removed to the proper district, the clerk of court is without power to refuse to issue a summons on the ground that the court is without jurisdiction.<sup>62</sup>

§ 7. — Against Whom Process May Issue

A court of one state may not make a citizen and resident of another state amenable to its process unless he is found within the state.

A natural person is not amenable to the process of a particular court unless he is subject to the jurisdiction of that court.<sup>63</sup> A court of one state cannot make a citizen and resident of another state amenable to its process,<sup>64</sup> unless he<sup>65</sup> or his duly authorized agent<sup>66</sup> is found in the state, but where he is served while in the state, the fact that the summons was issued when he was out of the state

b. County

- (1) In general
- (2) Joint defendants

(1) In General

Unless authorized by constitutional or statutory provisions, process may not issue to a county other than the one in which the action is commenced.

Process may not issue to a county other than the one in which the action is commenced<sup>77</sup> unless such issuance is authorized by constitutional or statutory provisions.<sup>78</sup> Thus, under the statutes in some jurisdictions, process may be issued to,

In action against corporation see Corporations § 1307.

County other than alleged residence of defendant

Issuance of citation to sheriff of another county than one in which petition alleged that defendants resided was unauthorized, and the filing of amended petition, correctly stating county of defendants' residence, imparted no efficacy to citation issued to sheriff of such county. —Walden v. Locke, Tex.Civ.App., 33 S.W.2d 475.

50 C.J. p 450 notes 96, 97, p 451 note 2.

Power of legislature to authorize running of process from one county into another see Constitutional Law § 128 g.

Presumption

It will be presumed that some one or more of the eventualities mentioned in the statute permitting the issuance of process to another county existed, thereby authorizing the issuance of a writ to the county other than that of the residence of defendants as alleged in the peti-

another county where an action is rightly brought in the court of any county.<sup>79</sup> The statute in force at the time the action is begun governs as to the right to issue process to another county for service.<sup>80</sup>

Issuance of process to another county is permissible only when the conditions required by the statute exist.<sup>81</sup> Process may not issue to another county where the action is not properly or rightly brought in the county from which the process issues.<sup>82</sup>

Number of defendants. Where authorized by statute, process may be issued to another county although there is but one defendant to the action.<sup>83</sup> Thus, process may be issued to another county in the case of a single defendant under a statute providing that where an action is rightly brought in any county, a summons shall be issued to any other county against any one or more of defendants, at the plaintiff's request,<sup>84</sup> or where the statute provides that plaintiff or his attorney may issue as many original summonses as either may elect and deliver one of such summonses to the sheriff of each county in which service on any defendant is desired.<sup>85</sup>

Process may be issued to another county or counties in the case of several defendants where such issuance is authorized by statute.<sup>86</sup>

(2) Joint Defendants

Under the conditions specified by statute, where two or more persons are joined as defendants, summons or other process may be issued and sent to another county or counties wherein the remaining defendants reside or may be found.

Under the statutes and the construction placed thereon, where two or more persons are properly joined as defendants and at least one of them resides, is served with summons, or voluntarily appears, in the county wherein the suit was brought, summons or other process may be issued and sent to another county or counties wherein the remaining defendants reside or may be found.<sup>87</sup> Such statutes have been held to apply to actions in tort as well as actions on contract.<sup>88</sup> However, process may be issued and sent to another county or counties where the remaining defendants reside or may be found only in those cases wherein the conditions prescribed by the statute exist.<sup>89</sup> Thus, under the express provisions of some statutes, process may be sent to another county only where the action in the county from which process issues is "rightly brought" therein.<sup>90</sup> It is essential that the action

Purpose of statute

Purpose of statute is to make it possible for a wronged party in any transitory action to seek his remedy in one action and not be required to pursue it in two or more separate actions in as many other jurisdictions, just because it happens that his wrongdoers reside in different counties of the state.—Uthoff v. Du Brie, 23 N.E.2d 854, 62 Ohio App. 285.

be bona fide against the resident of the county in which it is brought,<sup>91</sup> and all the persons sued must be rightfully joined as defendants;<sup>92</sup> there must be a cause of action<sup>93</sup> and a right to recover judgment<sup>94</sup> against defendant who resides or is served within the county wherein the suit is brought; and he must be a real and substantial, rather than a nominal, defendant.<sup>95</sup> A party against whom the law affords no right of action in the suit is not a real or material defendant.<sup>96</sup> A collusive joinder for the purpose of bringing suit against a nonresident of the county wherein the action is brought does not permit issuance of process to the other county.<sup>97</sup>

Under some statutes, process must be served on defendant in the county where the action is brought before process may issue against codefendants in other counties;<sup>98</sup> and if service of process is not legally obtainable on one of several defendants in the county where the action is brought, process may not be issued to any other county.<sup>99</sup>

In suit begun by attachment of the property of one defendant, a writ of summons may, under the construction placed on the statutes of some states, be issued to another county in which a codefendant resides or has property.<sup>1</sup>

§ 9. — Conditions Precedent to, and Time for, Issuance

Process may not be issued until such conditions precedent as are prescribed by statute or rule of court have been performed.

Such conditions precedent to the issuance of process must be performed as may be fixed by statute or rule of court,<sup>2</sup> and a failure to comply with the conditions prescribed ordinarily invalidates dent defendant.—Maggi v. Johnson, 194 P.2d 854, 200 Okl. 361.

Amendment stating cause of action

In action against resident and nonresident defendants, where court failed to acquire jurisdiction of nonresident defendants on summons issued to county of their residence because petition failed to state cause of action against resident defendant, amended petition which stated a joint transitory action against all defendants did not relate back and supply insufficiency of original petition so as to furnish authority for issuance of summonses served on nonresident defendants.—Maggi v. Indorsement of appearance day on petition Plaintiff's indorsement of day for defendants' appearance on amended petition to be adjudged decedent's heir and devisee would have been permissible under statute, but was not requisite to entitle plaintiff to giving of notice by publication to nonresident defendants and issuance of summons for resident defendants under subsequent provision of statute.—State ex rel. Hurd v. Davis, 82 N.E.2d 82, 226 Ind. 526.

Showing that court has jurisdiction of parties by reason of their

the process.<sup>3</sup> However, the rule is otherwise where the statute is for the benefit of the clerk of court,<sup>4</sup> as where it requires the payment of a tax or issuing fee before the issuance of the writ or summons.<sup>5</sup>

Præcipe or direction by plaintiff. A præcipe is a written order to the clerk of a court to issue a writ.<sup>6</sup> In the absence of a statutory requirement, a præcipe need not be filed by plaintiff.<sup>7</sup> The mere filing of a petition, without giving any directions to the clerk as to the issuance of process, amounts to an order to the clerk to issue process,<sup>8</sup> and it is the duty of the clerk to issue process immediately;<sup>9</sup> and, under the express provisions of some statutes, when a complaint is filed with the clerk, he must issue process promptly or immediately.<sup>10</sup> In the absence of directions to the clerk to delay the issuance of process, plaintiff will not be deprived of the benefits of filing for any default or neglect of the clerk unless such default or neglect is attributable to plaintiff.<sup>11</sup> Plaintiff may by request, or other facts showing such intention, delay the issuance of process on the filing of the complaint, even though the statute requires the clerk to issue process on the filing of a complaint;<sup>12</sup> and, where express direction not to issue process is given to the clerk, the filing of the petition does not amount to an order to the clerk to issue process in the cause.<sup>13</sup>

Under the statutes in some jurisdictions plaintiff is required to file a præcipe with the clerk before the summons or other process issues.<sup>14</sup> It serves the twofold purpose of marking the time when the action begins, even though the clerk should be dilatory in issuing the summons, and also as a guide to the clerk in preparing the process or summons.<sup>15</sup> Under such statutes the clerk may refuse to issue the summons until plaintiff files a præcipe;<sup>16</sup> but the filing of a præcipe is not jurisdictional,<sup>17</sup> and the clerk may waive it without affecting the validity of the process.<sup>18</sup>

The mere form of a præcipe is not a determining factor in ascertaining its sufficiency, but the paper, whatever its form, must contain a positive order to put the judicial machinery in motion.<sup>19</sup> Inaccuracies in the præcipe do not invalidate the process.<sup>20</sup> Where a præcipe for a summons or other process had no marks of cancellation or withdrawal superimposed on it at the time it was filed, placing them thereon subsequently, no matter by whom, without leave of court is ineffective to change the præcipe as originally filed.<sup>21</sup>

Failure by members of a partnership to comply with provisions of chapter of public laws respecting publicity of partnerships prior to issuance of writ in an action by such members makes process void.—Enosburg Grain Co. v. Wilder, 20 A.2d 473, 112 Vt. 11.

Other definition

"Præcipe" is a paper addressed to the prothonotary, entitled in the court out of which the writ is to issue, dated the day of its filing and containing with particularity the names of the parties, showing the form of the action, commanding the issuance of a writ of the kind and in the manner directed, and signed by the attorney or by the party, if he conducts his suit alone.—Casey v. Southern Corporation, Del., 29 A.2d 174.

Time for issuance. Process is to be issued at such time as may be directed by statute.<sup>22</sup> A summons which is issued after the return day is a nullity.<sup>23</sup> Under some statutes and the construction placed thereon, process cannot issue before the filing of the petition, declaration, or complaint.<sup>24</sup> It is not required that the complaint shall be filed and the summons issued at the same time;<sup>25</sup> and in a jurisdiction wherein the statutes place no limitation on the time of issuing a summons, it may issue at any time;<sup>26</sup> but in some jurisdictions the codes or statutes provide for the issuance of a summons within a limited period of time after the filing of the complaint,<sup>27</sup> and it must be issued within the time limited,<sup>28</sup> unless the code or statutory provision is directory<sup>29</sup> or an order of court for the issuance of process is procured;<sup>30</sup> and it is within the discretion of the court to allow or refuse the issuance of summons after a long delay<sup>31</sup> or after the expiration of the statutory period.<sup>32</sup>

§ 10. Form, Requisites, Validity, and Construction

- a. In general
- b. Form and contents

a. In General

The requisites of process are largely statutory. Some courts construe statutes and rules of court regulating process as mandatory, while others regard them as merely directory.

The requisites of process are largely matters of statutory regulation,<sup>33</sup> and a strict,<sup>34</sup> or at least a substantial,<sup>35</sup> compliance therewith is necessary, although a substantial compliance has been held sufficient.<sup>36</sup> Process merely voidable in character is valid until attacked.<sup>37</sup>

Construction generally. The want of proper certainty in a citation cannot be supplied by construction<sup>38</sup> or intendment.<sup>39</sup> In some jurisdictions the statutes and rules of court regulating process are held to be mandatory in character<sup>40</sup> and subject to a strict construction;<sup>41</sup> but in other jurisdictions they are regarded as merely direc-

Prayer for process

(1) In some jurisdictions the complaint or petition must contain a prayer for process and, in the absence of a prayer, the clerk has no authority to issue process, and process issued without such prayer is void.—Crown Laundry v. Burch, 53 S.E.2d 116, 205 Ga. 211, followed in Crown Laundry v. Higgins, 53 S.E.2d 118, 205 Ga. 214, and Crown Laundry v. Robertson, 53 S.E.2d 119, 205 Ga. 214.

tory<sup>42</sup> and are accorded a liberal construction.<sup>43</sup>

What law governs. The sufficiency of a process must be determined by the law in force on the date of its issuance.<sup>44</sup>

Power of legislature. Within constitutional limitations, the legislature may change the form and requisites of a summons as it sees fit.<sup>45</sup>

b. Form and Contents

The form and contents of a process should be such as to afford notice and to effect a substantial compliance with any provisions of statute or court rule prescribing matters of form.

The form of process must be such as to lead to actual notice as far as information and circumstances permit,<sup>46</sup> and, in the absence of a mandatory requirement of positive law prescribing some particular form, a process which affords adequate notice is sufficient.<sup>47</sup> A summons is sufficient to confer jurisdiction where it performs the function of giving notice according to statutory requirements with such particularity and certainty as not to deceive or mislead.<sup>48</sup> Ordinarily mere irregularities in form will not vitiate a process,<sup>49</sup> as when a required statement is added by way of a memorandum upon the summons instead of inserting it in the body thereof.<sup>50</sup> A failure to state the street number of plaintiff's attorney is held to be a mere irregularity and not jurisdictional,<sup>51</sup> and it has been said that in order to deprive the court of jurisdiction the process must be so defective as to be void.<sup>52</sup> In jurisdictions wherein a statement of the file number of the suit is required, a failure to state such number in the body or on the face of a citation has been held to be fatal<sup>53</sup> even though it is indorsed on the back of the citation.<sup>54</sup> A registered letter does not constitute effective process.<sup>55</sup>

Statutes and rules of court. It is necessary that the writ contain whatever a statute or rule of court prescribes,<sup>56</sup> such as a direction to defendant to answer and to serve his answer on plaintiff at a specified place within the state.<sup>57</sup> Where a statute contains an enumeration of all that is required to constitute a legal citation, failure to insert other matters has been held not fatal.<sup>58</sup> Where

Statute requiring summons to be subscribed by plaintiff or his attorney and directed to defendant, and requiring service of answer at specified place within specified number of days after service is to be liberally construed to avoid defeating action because of technical and formal defects which could not reasonably have misled defendant.—Tharp v. so provided by statute, plaintiff must proceed by a summons<sup>59</sup> or citation,<sup>60</sup> rather than a notice<sup>61</sup> or an order to show cause,<sup>62</sup> although under some circumstances defendant may be held to have waived the requirement of a summons so as to make an order to show cause effective where it contains every requisite of a summons.<sup>63</sup> Where the code or statutory provisions relating to a summons do not prescribe a form thereof, a process is sufficient if it clearly informs defendant that the instrument is intended for him and requires an answer to the complaint,<sup>64</sup> but where the codes, statutes, or rules of court do prescribe the form of the process its form should be in substantial compliance with such statutory requirements.<sup>65</sup> A court or judge is without power to prescribe a form which is inconsistent with a code or statutory provision;<sup>66</sup> nor, where an existing statute may reasonably be construed to provide for process, should resort be had to a power conferred on a court by code or statute to frame suitable writs in the absence of a statute prescribing a process to be used.<sup>67</sup> A code provision to the effect that writs in the form or effect of the precedents appended to the code section shall be sufficient, by implication means that any further and substantial withdrawal from the requirements of the common law shall be less than sufficient.<sup>68</sup>

Direction or demand. In order to constitute process in court procedure it is essential that the

Writ sent to another county for service on a co-defendant should be an exact counterpart of the one which is to be executed within the county,<sup>72</sup> except that it should be directed to another sheriff under principles discussed infra § 12, and only the party to be served need be named, as considered infra § 15.

Conformity to, and aided by, pleading. When issued on a pleading, process must conform thereto.<sup>73</sup> Sometimes process is held sufficient when read and construed in connection with a complaint or petition to which it refers<sup>74</sup> or which is attached thereto.<sup>75</sup> An order of court and a petition together may properly be regarded as a summons where it is provided by a subsequent order of court that they shall be so regarded and they contain substantially every requisite of a summons prescribed by code provisions.<sup>76</sup>

The "style" of a writ should not be confused with the "teste" thereof.<sup>77</sup> The term "style" is employed to designate the name in which the writ or process runs, and a writ is properly said to run in the name of the person from whom or the government from which the command on the face of the writ appears to emanate.<sup>78</sup> The purpose of statutory and constitutional provisions prescribing the style of process is to exclude any private person, or any political power other than that designated, from the exercise of the authority to issue process.<sup>79</sup> The use of quotation marks in such a provision favors the idea that the style prescribed must be used verbatim,<sup>80</sup> and, in any event, in order to effect a compliance with such requirements there should be at least a substantial conformity to the style prescribed.<sup>81</sup> In some states such provisions are held to be mandatory,<sup>82</sup> but in others they are held to be merely directory.<sup>83</sup> Also, in some jurisdictions process which is not in the prescribed style is void,<sup>84</sup> but in others it is voidable only.<sup>85</sup>

Place of statement. While the place for the style is properly at the head of the writ, it may nevertheless appear elsewhere without rendering the summons invalid.<sup>86</sup> However, the statement of the state and county in the margin of process, as ordinarily employed to show the venue, is not sufficient to cause the process to be regarded as running in the name of the state.<sup>87</sup>

What constitutes process within requirements.

The word "process" is employed in such provisions in a restricted sense,<sup>88</sup> and, as so employed, has reference only to such process as under the common law of England is required to run in the name of the king;<sup>89</sup> the summons or other instrument by which a defendant is put on notice of the charge lodged against him or of the existence of any action which may have been brought against him.<sup>90</sup> The provisions apply only to judicial proceedings<sup>91</sup> or to process emanating from a court;<sup>92</sup> they do not apply to special proceedings,<sup>93</sup> or to proceedings in an executive department of a state,<sup>94</sup> or to a summons or notice given by a party or his attorney under statutory authority;<sup>95</sup> nor do they apply to a citation,<sup>96</sup> although a citation issued by the court has been regarded as a form of process subject to the statutes.<sup>97</sup>

Statutory tribunal

Under constitution providing that all writs should be in name of the state, statutory notice or summons issued out of small claims division of district court which was not issued in name of the state was held valid, since constitutional requirement included only such processes as at common law were required to be in name of sovereign, and small claims division of district court was statutory tribunal.—Silent Watchman Corporation v. ## § 12. — Direction

Ordinarily process should be directed to the officer who is to serve it; where the officer ordinarily serving process is disqualified to act, the process should be directed to some other designated officer.

Process ordinarily should be directed to the officer who is to serve it,<sup>98</sup> such as the sheriff of the county<sup>99</sup> wherein the suit is pending<sup>1</sup> or where defendant resides,<sup>2</sup> and statutes so providing have been held to be mandatory.<sup>3</sup> Where the defendant is alleged to be a resident of another county and the issuance of process to, and service within, such county is authorized by law, process may be directed to the sheriff of such county;<sup>4</sup> but under some statutes or rules of court the summons is to be directed to defendant.<sup>5</sup> A rule providing that every process shall be directed to any sheriff or constable within the state eliminates a former requirement that new process must be issued to every county wherein the person to be served may be found,<sup>6</sup> and issuance of a process directed to the sheriff or any constable of a named county is a sufficient compliance with such rule.<sup>7</sup>

The right of a litigant to select a process server is a substantial one,<sup>8</sup> and in the absence of statutory authority neither the court nor a clerk thereof may interfere with such right, as by diverting to others a process directed to a particular officer.<sup>9</sup> Where local executive officers have failed to act, the governor, as executive head of the state, may set enforcement machinery in motion and thereby determine to whom civil process shall be directed for execution.<sup>10</sup> Statutes authorizing appointment of a special officer to serve process of a certain

court for good cause shown and providing that a judge in vacation may order process to be directed to any proper person, and that if application is made in vacation it shall be in writing and filed with the clerk, require a written application sufficient to acquaint the judge with a basis to determine whether or not to hear evidence thereon.<sup>11</sup> In an urgent case, as where plaintiff is in danger of losing his debt and an officer is not seasonably to be had, direction of the writ to an indifferent person is permissible under some statutes.<sup>12</sup>

Officer in another state. Under some statutes, and the construction placed thereon, process to be served in another state may be directed "to any officer authorized by law to serve process" within that state, without naming or designating any particular officer.<sup>13</sup> In the absence of a statute conferring it, a clerk of court in one state is without authority to issue a summons directed to the sheriff of a county in another state.<sup>14</sup>

Effect of want of proper direction. Whether the want of a proper direction is a fatal defect in a writ is a question on which there is a difference of judicial opinion; some courts hold that the defect is fatal to the validity of the writ,<sup>15</sup> while others take the view that it is not fatal.<sup>16</sup> The absence of a proper direction is a mere informality in case of a statutory summons which does not issue out of the court,<sup>17</sup> provided the instrument discloses for whom it is intended.<sup>18</sup>

Disqualification of officer. Where the sheriff or other officer who ordinarily serves writs is disqualified to serve process in a particular case, the process should not be directed to him;<sup>19</sup> and where it is provided by statute that in such case the process shall be directed to, and served by, some other designated officer, the process should be directed to such officer;<sup>20</sup> but a statutory condition precedent to such direction must have been fulfilled;<sup>21</sup> and under some statutes the facts giving the substitute authority to serve the writ should appear on the face thereof.<sup>22</sup>

Directions for return. The naming of an impossible return day in a writ or process is equivalent to naming no day,<sup>23</sup> and may render a summons void.<sup>24</sup> On the other hand, there may be circumstances under which failure to name a return day will not be prejudicial to defendant,<sup>25</sup> and where the law requires the officer to return process a direction to him to do so need not be inserted.<sup>26</sup>

§ 13. — Designation of Court, Judge, and Place

Process should designate with substantial accuracy the court in which the action is instituted and the place of holding court.

The process should designate the court in which the action is brought<sup>27</sup> and in which defendant should appear.<sup>28</sup> It should be made returnable in the county in which the suit or proceeding is instituted;<sup>29</sup> and, if the process requires defendant's appearance before the court, the place of holding the court must be named with reasonable certainty,<sup>30</sup> unless fixed by law.<sup>31</sup> There should be due compliance with statutory provisions requiring the process to state the place of the filing of the petition or complaint and the county in which the process issues,<sup>32</sup> the place where the answer is to be filed<sup>33</sup> or served,<sup>34</sup> or the county in which plaintiff desires the trial.<sup>35</sup> The process is vitiated by an untrue and misleading statement therein as to the court in which the action is pending,<sup>36</sup> the county,<sup>37</sup> or the place where the answer is to be served,<sup>38</sup> or by a statement which is so uncertain as to make it doubtful in which one of two named counties defendant is to appear;<sup>39</sup> and a summons commanding defendant to appear before one court cannot confer jurisdiction over him on another court;<sup>40</sup> but an omission or inaccuracy may be cured by a

§ 14. — Statement of Time or Date

- a. Of filing of complaint
- b. Of process
- c. For appearance, answer, and return

a. Of Filing of Complaint

Statutory provisions requiring a summons or citation to state the date of the filing of the complaint have been held to be mandatory.

A code or statutory provision that the summons or citation shall state the date of the filing of the petition or complaint has been held mandatory<sup>46</sup> and requires a statement of the true date of the filing of the pleading.<sup>47</sup> The requirement is not satisfied by a statement of the date of filing of a copy of the complaint.<sup>48</sup>

b. Of Process

While a writ or process should be dated, ordinarily it is held that an error or omission in respect of the date will not invalidate the instrument.

While a process should be dated,<sup>49</sup> the date of the writ is not a material part of it,<sup>50</sup> and an error therein,<sup>51</sup> or the entire omission thereof,<sup>52</sup> does not invalidate the writ. A statutory requirement as to the date of process is directory merely.<sup>53</sup> The writ is presumed to have been issued on the day of its date,<sup>54</sup> or the day on which it was tested,<sup>55</sup> and according to some authority such presumption is conclusive,<sup>56</sup> although other authorities hold that the presumption is not a conclusive one.<sup>57</sup> A further reference in the writ to the year of the inde-

Mere inference

Where a process failed to state that a petition "is" or "will be" filed, except by inference, it was fatally defective under a statute requiring the notice or process to inform defendant that a petition was or would be filed on or before a date named therein.—Rhodes v. Oxley, 235 N.W. 919, 212 Iowa 1018.

Omission of year

Citation reciting that petition was filed on "the 19 day of October, 194—," was fatally defective and would not support a judgment by default in favor of plaintiff.—Garza v. Garza, Tex.Civ.App., 223 S.W.2d 964.

Obvious clerical error

Original writ of summons and attachment in established form and common use issued out of clerk's office in name of commonwealth under seal of court, and which conformed to constitutional requirements did not lose its character as a process of the court by reason of an obvious clerical mistake in its date by which it appeared that writ was actually entered four days before its date.—*Moriarty v. ### c. For Appearance, Answer, and Return

- (1) In general
- (2) Requisites and sufficiency
- (3) Construction

(1) In General

A process should specify the time at which the defendant is to appear or answer where so provided by statute or rule of court. The return day of a writ may be regarded as that on which the defendant is ordered to appear.

Sometimes the "return day" of a writ is considered not only as the day on which the sheriff or other officer is to bring in the writ and report or certify what he has done pursuant to the command thereof, as discussed infra § 93, but also as the day on which defendant is ordered to appear in court;<sup>61</sup> and some statutes expressly provide that the writ or summons shall command defendant to appear, or appear and answer, on the return day of the process.<sup>62</sup>

Necessity of specifying date. A process should specify the time when defendant is to appear<sup>63</sup> or answer,<sup>64</sup> or both,<sup>65</sup> as provided by the statutes or rules of court of the particular jurisdiction. However, there is some authority for the proposition that, where the law fixes the time within which defendant must appear, the failure of a summons to fix the time for appearance and answer as provided in a code or statutory form is not fatal,<sup>66</sup> as well as for the proposition that, if the return day of the process is fixed by statute, it need not be designated in the process.<sup>67</sup> Some statutes, together with accompanying rules and forms, have eliminated return days from writs of summons.<sup>68</sup>

- (2) Requisites and Sufficiency
  - (a) Appearance or answer
  - (b) Return

(a) Appearance or Answer

Process should comply substantially with statutory provisions requiring it to state the time for appearance or answer.

A statement in the process of the time for appearance or answer must, in order to be sufficient, comply substantially with a statute requiring the process to state such time,<sup>69</sup> as well as a statute prescribing the time.<sup>70</sup> The process or summons may not validly shorten the time for appearance or answer from that prescribed by statute.<sup>71</sup> The process is void where it commands or requires the appearance of defendant at an impossible date,<sup>72</sup> such as prior to the date of service.<sup>73</sup>

On the other hand, certain errors, omissions, or irregularities may not be fatal,<sup>74</sup> such as an obvious clerical error,<sup>75</sup> or where the process or summons affords defendant a longer time to appear or answer than provided by statute.<sup>76</sup> Omission of the

Correction of printed form by typing

Citation issued Febr. 13, 1920, was not void as indicating impossible date in that it required defendant to appear in March, 1912, where numerals 191— were printed on printed form and the numeral 1 following 19 was stricken through with diagonal line made by typewriter and then followed figure 2 followed by an indistinct 0 made by typewriter, since it was clear that it was returnable in March, 1920, not in 1912.—Johnson v. word "days"<sup>77</sup> or the words "exclusive of the day of service,"<sup>78</sup> the use of the word "before" instead of "at,"<sup>79</sup> a nonprejudicial attempt to abridge the time for answering by requiring defendant to answer during the forenoon of the last day,<sup>80</sup> a failure to follow the statutory language where such failure does not deceive or mislead defendant,<sup>81</sup> or surplusage concerning the time for appearance will not affect the writ.<sup>82</sup>

With respect to term. Under some statutes, and the construction accorded thereto, the process ordinarily should specify, with reasonable certainty, the term,<sup>83</sup> and the day of the term,<sup>84</sup> at which appearance is required; but it has been held sufficient to specify the term merely, where the law determines the day of the term on which appearance must be made.<sup>85</sup> Where a notice undertakes to specify the date on which the term begins, and designates an erroneous date, such erroneous designation is misleading and fatal to the validity of the notice.<sup>86</sup> A summons requiring the appearance of defendant on the first day of the next term of court, and not otherwise specifying the time, may be upheld where the time of holding such term is prescribed by law;<sup>87</sup> but where it is provided that the day shall be plainly expressed, a faulty reference to the day is not aided by the fact that defendant is also required to appear at the "term next to be holden," the date of which is fixed by general law.<sup>88</sup>

(b) Return

Process must be made returnable to a day which is a legal return day, and is void where made returnable on an impossible date or at the wrong term or in vacation.

Process is void where it is made returnable to a day which is not a legal return day,<sup>89</sup> or on an impossible date,<sup>90</sup> such as a day past,<sup>91</sup> and where the law fixes a definite date on which a process is returnable it cannot be made returnable on a different date.<sup>92</sup> Generally speaking, if the statute provides that a certain number of days must intervene between the return day and the date of issuance of the writ, the specification of fewer days makes the summons void;<sup>93</sup> and similarly, if the statute requires the return within a specified time, the specification of a longer time may invalidate the summons.<sup>94</sup> However, an error in stating the time at which process is returnable is not fatal where defendant is not deceived or misled to his detriment or prejudice.<sup>95</sup> The omission of the word "next" after the month designated is immaterial,<sup>96</sup> and there is some authority for the proposition that if the return day of the process is fixed by law an erroneous designation does not invalidate it.<sup>97</sup> A provision in process as to the time for the return thereof will be upheld where the time stated is proper under a code or statutory provision which is applicable to the facts.<sup>98</sup> The return day may be expressed in figures.<sup>99</sup>

mons returnable on the date of its issuance;<sup>2</sup> but under the construction accorded some code provisions the rule is otherwise.<sup>3</sup>

A code provision that a summons shall be returnable on the second Monday after its date, but that when issued to another county it may be made returnable, at the option of the party having it issued, on the third or fourth Monday after its date, is for the benefit of plaintiff, and does not prevent him from selecting the earlier and usual date for the return of a summons issued to another county.<sup>4</sup>

Term or vacation. Process is bad where it is made returnable at a wrong term,<sup>5</sup> a wrong day of a term,<sup>6</sup> a time when no term is to be held,<sup>7</sup> or a day out of term.<sup>8</sup> Under some statutes a writ is properly made returnable to the next succeeding term, although less than the statutory period for notice has intervened between the issuance of the summons and the first day of the term,<sup>9</sup> and although a continuance may be made necessary for lack of proper service;<sup>10</sup> but under other statutes, when the necessary period does not intervene, the summons should be made returnable to the term following the next succeeding term<sup>11</sup> or to the next rule day in vacation.<sup>12</sup>

Criminal term. In some states an original summons made returnable at a criminal term is in accordance with the statutes.<sup>13</sup>

Effect of amount claimed. In an action instituted in a court which possesses the jurisdiction of a justice of the peace and also additional jurisdiction, the process is, under the statutes and the construction placed thereon, to be made returnable on the first day of the next or succeeding term where the amount claimed exceeds a specified amount,<sup>14</sup> but if the sum claimed is less than that amount the process is to be made returnable in the same manner as though issued by a justice of the peace.<sup>15</sup>

(3) Construction

Ordinarily, where there is an ambiguous or indefinite designation of the time for answer or return, a writ will be so construed as to validate it.

Ordinarily, where there is an indefinite or ambiguous designation of the time for answer or return, the language of the writ will be construed so as to support it and render it operative if such construction is reasonable,<sup>16</sup> and insensible words used in connection with the designation of the return day will be rejected as surplusage;<sup>17</sup> but some courts take the view that a want of proper certainty in point of time cannot be supplied by construction or intendment.<sup>18</sup>

"Next." Where the writ is made returnable on a certain day of a certain month "next," and the same month has already been expressed in stating the date of the writ, it is construed in some jurisdictions to be returnable in the ensuing year,<sup>19</sup> rendering the writ invalid if the statute requires it to be returnable at an earlier time,<sup>20</sup> but in other jurisdictions it is construed to be returnable in the current year.<sup>21</sup> At any rate, such a provision for return cannot be construed as referring to another day of the month.<sup>22</sup>

When so provided by code or statute, a summons or other process should state the title of the cause.<sup>23</sup> The process not only may,<sup>24</sup> and ordinarily should,<sup>25</sup> state the names of the parties, but it should also state such names fully and correctly,<sup>26</sup> and not name a defendant other than, and different from, the one named in the petition.<sup>27</sup> The naming of defendants in the alternative is fatal.<sup>28</sup> Where the person intended to be sued is named as defendant, service on a different person not acting for the intended defendant confers no jurisdiction over either the person named in the process or the person actually served;<sup>29</sup> and, when a defendant is described and served with process in terms identifying one person or corporation, the proceeding will not bind a different person or entity not served.<sup>30</sup> Where a summons is addressed to a named defendant and by substituted service is left with a third person at the place of abode common to both the named defendant and his brother, it cannot be considered as service on the brother.<sup>31</sup> A summons failing to name a person on its face and notify him to appear is no summons as far as the unnamed person is concerned,<sup>32</sup> and unless a notice is directed to defendant it is not sufficient.<sup>33</sup> Where the person named in a writ as defendant is dead, the writ is a nullity<sup>34</sup> and service on the decedent's representative confers no jurisdiction over the representative.<sup>35</sup>

On the other hand, the fact that the designation of a party is omitted, inaccurate, or incomplete may not be fatal under the circumstances,<sup>36</sup> as where the omission is supplied or the inaccuracy is cured in another part of the writ<sup>37</sup> or by the complaint, petition, or statement of claim, or copy thereof, which accompanies or is served with the process,<sup>38</sup> or

Notation on back

Notation of a name similar to defendant's on back of summons, which was probably placed there by a clerk or by process server, was not a part of the process and did not satisfy requirement that defendant's name appear in the summons.—Rockefeller v. Hein, 28 N.Y.S.2d 266, 176 Misc. 659.

"Et al"

Use of the words "et al" when there is more than one defendant is an insufficient designation.—Lyman v. Milton, 44 Cal. 630.

In Texas

(1) The statute has been held mandatory.—Temple Lumber Co. v. McDaniel, Civ.App., 24 S.W.2d 518.

(2) However, citation stating that nature of plaintiff's demand was fully shown by accompanying copy of petition with specified file number, filed on stated date, was held sufficient as fully complying with civil procedure rule, although it did not state names of all parties to suit.—Sgitcovich v. Oldfield, Civ.App., 220 S.W.2d 724, error refused.

26. Okl.—Corpus Juris cited in State v. City of Tulsa, 5 P.2d 744, 746, 153 Okl. 262.
50 C.J. p 458 note 38.

Omission of "Inc."

Citation held valid, although omitting "Inc." from corporate plaintiff's name, there being a sufficient compliance with statutory requirements that a citation mention the "title of the cause" where the main part of plaintiff's name was set forth.—Southern Hide Co. v. Best, 141 So. 449, 174 La. 748.

"Et ux;" "et uxor"

A citation to the effect that a named person "et ux" or "et uxor" are the plaintiffs in an action is insufficient for failure properly to designate the wife, since the citation fails to state who the wife is.—Higgins v. Shepard, 107 S.W. 79, 48 Tex.Civ.App. 365.

where the real party intended is before the court by consent or actual personal service.<sup>39</sup> An error in the name of a codefendant offers no ground of objection to a defendant rightly named and served.<sup>40</sup> A summons to answer plaintiff "or his attorney" has been held sufficient<sup>41</sup> on the ground that the last mentioned words might be rejected as surplusage.<sup>42</sup>

Because of the names being idem sonans, the variance between the name stated and the real name may not be material,<sup>43</sup> but the application of the doctrine of idem sonans is more strict with respect to constructive service than where service is personal,<sup>44</sup> and, under the doctrine that statutory methods of giving notice to a defendant other than by personal service are to be strictly followed, it has been held that the rule of idem sonans will not be applied to give a court jurisdiction where service was by publication and defendant's name was erroneously given, even though under other circumstances such name might be sufficient within the rule.<sup>45</sup>

While an inaccuracy in spelling that does not actually mislead has been held not fatal,<sup>46</sup> an error in spelling so great as in effect to name an entirely different person has been held to invalidate the writ.<sup>47</sup>

Process issued to another county, against a non-resident defendant, need not,<sup>48</sup> and must not,<sup>49</sup> name the other defendants.

Full names, initials, or abbreviations. Although not essential under some practice,<sup>50</sup> it has been held under other practice that the full Christian name and surname of each party required to be named should be given,<sup>51</sup> and that the use of an initial to designate the Christian name is insufficient;<sup>52</sup> but sometimes the use of an abbreviation is considered not fatal.<sup>53</sup> While the insertion of a wrong initial letter between the Christian and surnames of a party may not be absolutely fatal,<sup>54</sup> a mistake in the middle initial may be material where the Christian name is designated only by an initial.<sup>55</sup>

Name unknown. Under some code or statutory provisions, and the construction placed thereon, if the name of a defendant is unknown a fictitious name may be given in the process, adding a statement that it is fictitious.<sup>56</sup>

Residence or address of parties must be shown by the process where required by statute,<sup>57</sup> but failure to indorse plaintiff's address on a summons has been held a mere irregularity not affecting the jurisdiction of the court,<sup>58</sup> and in the absence of statutory requirement the summons or other process need not state the residence of the parties.<sup>59</sup>

§ 16. — Statement of Nature of Action

Where required by statute, it is necessary for a process or summons to state the nature of the action directly or by reference to the pleadings.

In the absence of a requirement, a summons need not state the nature of the cause of action or the nature and purpose of the suit,<sup>60</sup> and the fact that it undertakes to do so but states only part, and not the whole, of the object and purpose of the suit does not render it void.<sup>61</sup> On the other hand, a statement in the process of the nature of plaintiff's demand, or of the cause and general nature of the action, is necessary when required by statute,<sup>62</sup> since such a statute is mandatory;<sup>63</sup> but the statute is sufficiently complied with by a brief and general characterization, without a statement of details.<sup>64</sup>

While it has been held sufficient to attach to the process a copy of the petition or complaint,<sup>65</sup> or to copy in the process almost literally the allegations of the petition,<sup>66</sup> and the process may be aided by a reference therein to the petition or complaint,<sup>67</sup> nevertheless it is not necessary for the process to contain every allegation made in the petition<sup>68</sup> or to state the cause of action with the same particularity as in the petition,<sup>69</sup> nor is it necessary to attach or annex plaintiff's pleading, or a copy thereof, to the process<sup>70</sup> unless it is so required by statute, in which case a mere folding inside of the writ is not sufficient.<sup>71</sup>

Effect of statement. The fact that a summons is entitled as a specific kind of action does not in itself determine the nature of the action.<sup>72</sup>

§ 17. — Notice of Sum or Relief Demanded or Result of Default

Process should comply with provisions of law requiring it to state the sum of money or other relief demanded and the consequences of default.

Process should comply with code or statutory provisions requiring it to state the sum of money or other relief demanded<sup>73</sup> or to apprise defendant of the result consequent on his default,<sup>74</sup> as in actions for the recovery of money only, that if defendant fail to appear, judgment will be taken against him for a specified sum,<sup>75</sup> or, in other actions, that in such case plaintiff will apply to the court for the relief demanded in the complaint,<sup>76</sup> or that in such case default will be entered against him.<sup>77</sup> A total failure to comply with such a requirement may be fatal;<sup>78</sup> but it is sometimes held not to be so,<sup>79</sup> as where the process refers to the complaint.<sup>80</sup> Either a strict<sup>81</sup> or a substantial<sup>82</sup> compliance with the statutory requirement is sufficient. In the absence of statutory requirement, the amount demanded need not be stated.<sup>83</sup>

§ 18. — Teste

The teste of process is the concluding clause, and under statutory or constitutional provisions ordinarily it is proper practice to have a process tested-by either the judge or clerk of court.

The teste of process is the concluding clause commencing: "Witness the Honorable A. B., judge of said Circuit Court, etc.," or as the case may be.<sup>84</sup> Although it is provided for in some state constitutions, the teste of process is generally considered a mere matter of form,<sup>85</sup> its only purpose being to give character and dignity to the process.<sup>86</sup> The use of the precise word "tested" is not necessary to render an attestation of process sufficient.<sup>87</sup>

Name. The teste should be in the name of the proper officer,<sup>88</sup> such as the judge<sup>89</sup> or clerk,<sup>90</sup> as the case may be, under the constitutional or statutory provision of the particular jurisdiction; but, where the name of the proper officer is stated, the omission of his official title does not render the process void.<sup>91</sup> A summons which, under the statutes of the particular jurisdiction, is lawfully issued need not be tested in the name of the presiding judge.<sup>92</sup>

Time. The writ must be tested in term time,<sup>93</sup> and where it is sued out in vacation it must be tested as of the previous term;<sup>94</sup> it cannot bear teste of a term after it issues,<sup>95</sup> even though it is returnable at a subsequent term.<sup>96</sup> The teste of a writ is not conclusive as to the time of its issuance.<sup>97</sup>

§ 19. — Signature, Seal, and Stamp

- a. Signature
- b. Seal

a. Signature

Process should be signed by the authority designated by statute, which ordinarily is the clerk of court or, in some cases, the plaintiff or his attorney.

Process should be signed by the authority designated by statute,<sup>98</sup> as by the proper officer,<sup>99</sup> usually the clerk of the court,<sup>1</sup> this being required for purposes of authentication.<sup>2</sup> A signature in which an initial is used for the Christian name of the clerk is sufficient.<sup>3</sup> It has been both affirmed<sup>4</sup> and denied<sup>5</sup> that a writ is sufficiently signed where the signature of the clerk appears in the teste. Generally speaking, the clerk may authorize his signature to be made by another,<sup>6</sup> or he may adopt a

Signing copy as insufficient

It is essential to the validity of a suit that there be a signed original process which is served on defendant only by leaving with him a copy thereof, and failure to sign the original process is not cured by the service of a signed copy of the process on defendant, since the signed copy is not a copy of the unsigned original.—Kimsey v. ### Different county

Under statutes relating to issuance by clerk of courts of writs commencing civil actions, a writ must show on its face either that it was issued by the clerk of courts for the county where it is entered or that it was issued by the clerk of courts for another county and made returnable where entered, and a clerk may not sign writs which purportedly issue from a county other than his own.—City of Belfast v. City of Bath, 15 A.2d 249, 137 Me. 91.

Use of rubber stamp

Statutory requirement that summons shall be signed by clerk is met if clerk's name appears thereon whether by true signature or rubber stamp, and is duly attested to by a legally appointed, qualified, and acting deputy court clerk.—Allen v. Clover Valley Lumber Co., 42 P.2d 850, 171 Okl. 238.

printed signature;<sup>7</sup> but general authority given by the clerk to an attorney to sign writs is ineffective.<sup>8</sup> In order to be technically correct,<sup>9</sup> signature by a deputy should be in the name of the clerk,<sup>10</sup> but it is not indispensable that it be so,<sup>11</sup> and in certain contingencies provided for by some statutes a deputy may sign as such.<sup>12</sup>

By plaintiff or attorney. Under some statutes, and the construction placed thereon, a summons or original notice may<sup>13</sup> and should<sup>14</sup> be signed by plaintiff or his attorney, and it need not be signed by the clerk of court.<sup>15</sup> A typed signature of the attorney has been held sufficient.<sup>16</sup> Under statutes and rules of court requiring that a summons be signed by plaintiff's attorney and subscribed with such attorney's name, it has nevertheless been held that plaintiff's own name is sufficient for a valid summons,<sup>17</sup> the basis of such rule resting on other provisions authorizing a party to a civil action to prosecute or defend in person, and making every provision applicable to attorneys also applicable to parties.<sup>18</sup>

Effect of lack of proper signature. There is a difference of opinion among courts as to the effect of a want of proper signature,<sup>19</sup> some holding that it renders the process void<sup>20</sup> and insufficient to confer jurisdiction,<sup>21</sup> and others holding that it is a nonjurisdictional defect or irregularity<sup>22</sup> which renders the process voidable only.<sup>23</sup>

Stamp. Where process is required to be stamped, it has been held that the stamp is but a mere voucher, evidence of an extrinsic fact, namely, the payment of a tax or duty, and hence is no part of the writ.<sup>24</sup>

b. Seal

Process issuing out of a court should be under its seal, but no seal is required where the process issues from a party or his attorney.

Not only at common law, but also under statutes, and sometimes under rules of court, process which issues out of a court is required to be under the seal of that court,<sup>25</sup> unless the case falls within a statute dispensing with the necessity of a seal in certain cases,<sup>26</sup> or unless there is no official seal,<sup>27</sup> in which case the process should state that fact,<sup>28</sup> or, under some statutes, the clerk may and should affix his private seal.<sup>29</sup> The writ should bear the seal of the court authorized to issue it,<sup>30</sup> and a writ bearing an improper seal is regarded as though it bore no seal.<sup>31</sup> Some courts hold that an omission of the seal renders the writ void<sup>32</sup> and ineffective to confer jurisdiction;<sup>33</sup> but other courts hold that the omission renders the writ merely voidable<sup>34</sup> and in no way affects the jurisdiction of the court,<sup>35</sup> and that the seal is not requisite to the validity of the process,<sup>36</sup> or that an objection on this ground is without substance where defendant has been actually and fully informed of the nature and purpose of the action and the time when, and place where, he is required to appear.<sup>37</sup>

Where process issues from party or his attorney, it need not be under the seal of the court.<sup>38</sup>

§ 20. — Indorsements

An indorsement is an entry made on the back of a writ or process. Lack of due indorsement may invalidate the writ in some jurisdictions.

An indorsement of a writ is an entry made on the back thereof<sup>39</sup> and is sometimes called "backing;"<sup>40</sup> but a statement on the face, and at the foot or bottom, of a writ is held not to be such a failure to comply with a statute or rule of court requiring indorsement of the statement on the writ as to be fatal.<sup>41</sup> Particular matters which should be indorsed on the process, when so provided by statute or rule of court in the particular jurisdiction, include the cause of action,<sup>42</sup> the name of plaintiff's attorney,<sup>43</sup> the time when the writ was signed,<sup>44</sup> and the name of the officer who serves the writ.<sup>45</sup> Where a statute requiring an indorsement is of limited application, a compliance therewith is necessary in, and only in, cases within its terms.<sup>46</sup> An indorsement need not be signed by the clerk<sup>47</sup> or attested with the seal of the court.<sup>48</sup>

Some courts hold that a statute requiring indorsement of process is mandatory<sup>49</sup> and that a failure to comply therewith is a fatal defect<sup>50</sup> which renders the process void.<sup>51</sup> Other courts, however, hold that such a statute is directory<sup>52</sup> and that a failure to comply therewith is not fatal,<sup>53</sup> but is rather a mere irregularity<sup>54</sup> which does not render the process void.<sup>55</sup> It has also been held that the indorsement on the back of a citation is not deemed an essential part of the proceedings,<sup>56</sup> that a mandatory requirement of statute that a citation state the names of all parties does not apply to an indorsement on the back of the instrument,<sup>57</sup> and that the indorsement of the return day on the back of the writ is merely for the convenience of the serving officer and is no part of its command.<sup>58</sup>

Effect of unnecessary indorsement. The making of an unnecessary indorsement on process is not fatal where it does not tend to mislead,<sup>59</sup> as where the facts stated therein are true;<sup>60</sup> but where an unnecessary indorsement names a return day different from the one named in the body of the writ

§ 21. Alias, Pluries, Successive, and Renewed Writs

- a. In general
- b. Issuance
- c. Form and contents

a. In General

An alias writ used to commence an action is a second writ issued after the first has failed to effect its purpose, and a pluries writ is a subsequent writ issued under like circumstances.

An alias writ used to commence an action is a second writ of the same kind issued when the first has failed of its purpose,<sup>65</sup> or, in other words, a writ issued where one of the same kind has already been issued in the same cause, but has lost its force without having been effective;<sup>66</sup> and a pluries writ is a third or subsequent writ issued after preceding writs have proved ineffectual.<sup>67</sup> A summons should be classified according to its substance rather than the name given it,<sup>68</sup> and the mere indorsement of the word "alias" or "pluries" on a process or summons will not make it such if the instrument is in fact merely an ordinary summons;<sup>69</sup> but the character of process purporting to be original may be changed by a memorandum or order thereon specifying the date of the original writ.<sup>70</sup> A particular summons may be an "alias summons"<sup>71</sup> even though it is entitled "amended summons,"<sup>72</sup> but in jurisdictions wherein a summons is issued and subscribed by plaintiff or his attorney, rather than by the clerk of court, a second or subsequent summons is not an alias or pluries writ.<sup>73</sup> Process issued after a discontinuance cannot be regarded as alias process.<sup>74</sup> When it is desired that the action shall date from the date of the original summons, or when it is necessary for it to do so in order to toll the statute of limitations, the successive writs must show their relation to the original process,<sup>75</sup> and where they do so the subsequent writ may be effective as of the date of the original.<sup>76</sup> Defects in an original but unexecuted summons are not available against an alias,<sup>77</sup> and invalidity of the first process does not affect the validity of a second one.<sup>78</sup> However, service of the alias cannot relate back to the time of the issuance of the original, so as to validate any proceedings had meantime, where the regularity of such proceedings depended on defendant's being before the court.<sup>79</sup> Where the summons first issued is not properly indorsed, and another summons properly indorsed is subsequently issued, the latter summons may be regarded as the original,<sup>80</sup> and not as an alias,<sup>81</sup> summons. Also the fact that a party has secured the issuance of an alias writ, which is irregular and void, does not

Continuance of original process

An alias summons is a continuance of the original process and may issue to add new parties to the record, to continue the action where service on defendant has not been obtained, where those named in the original writ cannot be served before the return date, or where service or return of a previous writ has been set aside without vacation or abatement of the writ itself.—Martz v. Where summons issued after invalid service of original summons was indorsed with the word "alias," but contained no reference in the body to the original summons, summons was ineffective as "alias summons."—Mintz v. Frink, 6 S.E.2d 804, 217 N.C. 101.

prevent him from availing himself of any remedy which he might have had if the writ had not been issued;<sup>82</sup> and, where the statute of limitations has not run,<sup>83</sup> a writ which is improper as an alias writ may be good as an original summons<sup>84</sup> or may be treated as a new writ for a new suit.<sup>85</sup> The fact that an alias writ is returned "not found" as to a defendant who was served on the original will not have the effect of vitiating such service.<sup>86</sup>

Renewal and reissue. A court with jurisdiction of the subject matter of a suit should issue its process repeatedly and in various forms, if necessary to compel anyone within its jurisdiction to submit thereto.<sup>87</sup> Where a defendant has not been found and served within the original return periods, the court on a showing of due diligence may renew its process so as to make it returnable at a later period.<sup>88</sup> The courts have, however, disapproved the practice of reissuing a returned writ with imprint of a renewal stamp instead of issuing an entirely new instrument.<sup>89</sup>

b. Issuance

- (1) In general
- (2) Time of issuance

(1) In General

Issuance of an alias, pluries, successive, or renewed writ may and should be made only in compliance with conditions of statutes or rules of court, and ordinarily it is prerequisite to issuance of such a writ that there first be issued an original writ, and that the latter be returned unexecuted or otherwise be shown to have been ineffective.

In order that another, or alias, summons may be issued under statutory authority it must be shown that the conditions imposed by statute exist.<sup>90</sup> Ordinarily prior issuance of an original writ is prerequisite to issuance of an alias writ or summons,<sup>91</sup> and, where the original process is fatally defective in form, ordinarily it is improper to issue an alias process.<sup>92</sup> Generally an alias or pluries writ may be issued when, and only when, the preceding writ or writs have been returned not executed,<sup>93</sup> the service has been irregular or de-

Request

Where a writ of summons has been returned unexecuted, another writ will not issue without a request therefor.—Mayne v. Jacob Michel Real Estate Co., 180 S.W.2d 809, 237 Mo.App. 952.

Number of defendants

(1) Statutory authority to issue a second original process has been held to be limited to cases where there are two or more defendants joined in the same action, and one or more resides in the county where suit is brought and one or more in a different county.—Scott v. Scott, 15 S.E.2d 416, 192 Ga. 370.

(2) On the other hand, it has been held that statute authorizing plaintiff to issue as many original summonses as he may elect and deliver one of them to sheriff of each county in which service on any defendant is desired permits issuance of more than one original summons for single defendant, sued in county of his residence, if plaintiff is uncertain as to whether defendant is to be found in such county or another county, and delivery of such summonses to sheriffs of different counties, so that defendant may be served where found, even though not found in county wherein suit was filed.—Mutzig v. Hope, 158 P.2d 110, 176 Or. 368.

91. Cal.—Brock v. Fouchy, 172 P.2d 945, 76 Cal.App.2d 363.

Jurisdictional defect

Where no summons issued from circuit court wherein detainee action purportedly originated, corporation court to which case was removed could not issue valid alias summons, and did not acquire jurisdiction by issuance of purported alias summons.—Preston v. Legard, 168 S.E. 445, 160 Va. 364.

Special appearance not a waiver

Where no summons issued from circuit court wherein detainee action purportedly originated, defendant specially appearing to contest jurisdiction of corporation court to which case was removed would not have waived summons by excepting to sufficiency of seizure bond.—Preston v. Legard, supra.

92. Pa.—Martz v. Gingell, 37 Pa. Dist. & Co. 429.

Pa.—Molleson v. Molleson, Com.Pl., 6 Sch.Reg. 111.

50 C.J. p 464 note 7.

Technical meaning of "return"

This was true because purpose of statute relating to issuance of alias summons on return of original summons without service, etc., was to permit issuance of alias summons fective,<sup>94</sup> or the original writ has been lost or destroyed, as discussed infra § 23.

The court has inherent power to award such further process;<sup>95</sup> but, unless conferred on him by statute,<sup>96</sup> the clerk has no authority to issue it without an order from the court.<sup>97</sup> While, in case the original summons is a nullity, another summons may be issued by the clerk,<sup>98</sup> without a return of the void summons or an order of court,<sup>99</sup> and even while a motion to quash the first summons is pending,<sup>1</sup> such a summons should not be an alias summons,<sup>2</sup> and where the first process was a nullity the second process should be treated as an original.<sup>3</sup>

It has been held not necessary that the issuance of alias process be preceded by an amendment of the petition,<sup>4</sup> the filing of a new petition,<sup>5</sup> or the refile of the original petition.<sup>6</sup> A request or application for the issuance of alias process may be oral<sup>7</sup> or written,<sup>8</sup> and, if it is in writing, it, or a copy thereof, need not be served.<sup>9</sup> A direction to the clerk to issue alias process will be presumed to have been properly given.<sup>10</sup> Where the statute does not require the clerk to issue an order directing himself to perform the statutory duty of issuing an alias or pluries writ, nevertheless, if he does draw an order or memorandum containing the facts essential to its issuance, this will not invalidate an otherwise valid writ.<sup>11</sup>

Issuance by plaintiff or attorney. In a jurisdiction wherein a summons is issued by plaintiff or his attorney, the issuance of one summons does not exhaust the power<sup>12</sup> or prevent the issuance of another summons;<sup>13</sup> but it has been held that, without leave of court, a second summons cannot properly be issued by plaintiff while a motion to quash the first summons is pending.<sup>14</sup> If the first summons is issued and served and then quashed, and plaintiff at such point issues an alias summons, the latter becomes in effect the original in the sense that it is the one on which jurisdiction of the court depends,<sup>15</sup> and by issuance of the alias summons plaintiff waives the right thereafter to complain of the court's ruling in respect of the first summons.<sup>16</sup> where original summons had lost its force before its function had been fully performed, and legislature did not intend to authorize alias process whenever someone should choose without apparent reason to take original summons back to clerk's office unserved but still servable.

Compliance with statute shown

Residence in another county

(1) Where citations to Atascosa County were returned unserved, clerk could issue other process to other counties on verbal request of plaintiff's attorney, without amended or supplemental petition having been filed by plaintiff showing residence of defendants to be in other counties.—Thompson v. Mayhew Lumber Co., Tex.Civ.App., 103 S.W. 2d 1005.

(2) Where petition alleged that all defendants lived in county and citation was issued to the proper officer in county for all defendants, there being no amended pleadings

filed, clerk of district court was without authority to issue citation to another county on ground no return was made, where record showed return was made but without service, since second citation was issued before first citation came into sheriff's hands, and thus before return could have been made.—Walker v. ## (2) Time of Issuance

The time of issuance of an alias, pluries, successive, or renewed writ should comply with the rules governing time and place of issuance of process generally.

Under the general rules governing the time for issuance of process, discussed supra § 9, which ordinarily control with respect to the time for issuance of alias, pluries, successive, and renewed writs,<sup>17</sup> issuance of such a writ or summons should be made within the time specified by statute or rule of court.<sup>18</sup> Where a summons is returned "not found" at any time after the lapse of the time in which it may be lawfully served, plaintiff is entitled to an alias summons without waiting until the return day named in the summons;<sup>19</sup> and, where the service of the original summons is not valid, the party seeking service is not required to wait until the first service is quashed before having an alias summons issued.<sup>20</sup> In some jurisdictions an order for alias summons should be applied for at the term to which the original summons was made returnable;<sup>21</sup> but in other jurisdictions the court may, at a subsequent term, grant an order allowing the issuance of new process<sup>22</sup> unless there has been long and unexplained delay.<sup>23</sup> The court may order the issuance of a new summons after the expiration of the statutory period in which the clerk of court may issue an alias summons.<sup>24</sup> An alias summons cannot be issued after the suit has terminated,<sup>25</sup> as by abatement,<sup>26</sup> discontinuance by operation of law,<sup>27</sup> or dismissal,<sup>28</sup> unless the dismissal is unauthorized and is subsequently vacated.<sup>29</sup>

Issuance after service by publication. Where plaintiff has, by publication, matured his cause of action and obtained the best service possible under the circumstances, he may, on a subsequent change of circumstances making it possible to obtain better service, have a personal summons issued<sup>30</sup> unless judgment has been rendered and entered.<sup>31</sup>

c. Form and Contents

An alias, pluries, successive, or renewal writ should comply in form and contents with the provisions of statutes and rules of court, and ordinarily such an instrument should be a substantial duplicate of the original.

Alias, pluries, successive, and renewal writs should comply in form and contents with the requirements of statutes and rules of court,<sup>32</sup> but a slight variance or defect in the instrument does not invalidate it.<sup>33</sup> Alias process should be a substantial duplicate of,<sup>34</sup> and show in its body its

Failure to show alias character

Fact that citations issued to two other counties after citations to a third county were returned unserved did not show that they were alias citations did not invalidate process.—Thompson v. Mayhew Lumber Co., Tex.Civ.App., 103 S.W.2d 1005.

Date of original writ

Under court rules a separate summons is itself a process of the court, and is required to state the day, month, and year of the return of the original writ.—Moriarty v. King, 57 N.E.2d 633, 317 Mass. 210.

Rubber stamp

Stamp used by common pleas court of City of Detroit on summons, authorizing particular person not interested in the cause to serve the writ, is used to designate particular person other than constable to make service, has nothing to do with pluries summons, and hence is not required on all of successive pluries summonses.—*Schram v. relation to the original process,<sup>35</sup> but it is not required to be more than a substantial duplicate;<sup>36</sup> a change in its form, in order to conform to a new statutory requirement, is proper.<sup>37</sup> Where an alias summons contains the information which was set out in the former summons, the fact that it contains more information does not invalidate it;<sup>38</sup> and the fact that an alias citation does not show the number of citations previously issued does not render it invalid.<sup>39</sup> While it is proper for an alias summons to employ the words "we command you, as we have before commanded you,"<sup>40</sup> nevertheless the omission of such words does not render the process void where it is in substance an alias writ;<sup>41</sup> and in jurisdictions wherein a second or subsequent summons is not an alias or pluries writ it need not contain the clause, "as we have heretofore commanded you," or, "as we have often commanded you."<sup>42</sup> Where plaintiff has discontinued as to a defendant not served, and issues a new summons as against such defendant, the fact that the new summons contains recitals as to the issuance and failure to serve the former process will not render it void.<sup>43</sup>

Naming parties defendant. It has been held that an alias writ need not name all the parties defendant;<sup>44</sup> but there is also authority to the contrary.<sup>45</sup> Also it has been both affirmed<sup>46</sup> and denied<sup>47</sup> that an alias writ may name a party defendant who was not named in the original process.

Date. Every subsequent process must be dated on the day of the return of the preceding process.<sup>48</sup>

§ 22. Alteration of Process

Under the practice prevailing in some jurisdictions an alteration made in a process after issuance but before service will invalidate it. Alterations after issuance and service may invalidate the writ.

Alteration of a writ after issuance and before service renders it void under the practice prevailing in some jurisdictions,<sup>49</sup> but in other jurisdictions an alteration before service may be regarded as a nonfatal irregularity,<sup>50</sup> although alteration after service may invalidate the process.<sup>51</sup>

§ 23. Supplying Lost Process

In case of the loss or destruction of process a copy thereof may be supplied in place of the original by an order of court.

Where process has been lost or destroyed, a copy thereof may be supplied in lieu of the original,<sup>52</sup> by, and only by, an order of court<sup>53</sup> made after notice has been given<sup>54</sup> and proper and sufficient evidence has been received.<sup>55</sup> An affidavit that the writ was duly served and thereafter lost should not be received in lieu of the process.<sup>56</sup> In some jurisdictions, where a writ or summons has been lost or destroyed, another, or alias, writ or summons may be issued or filed,<sup>57</sup> and it is within the power of the court to order a lost alias summons to be replaced by another on being satisfied of such loss.<sup>58</sup>

§ 24. Warning Order

In some jurisdictions a warning order may be substituted for service by publication. Such an order should be made only on compliance with statutory requirements.

Under the practice prevailing by statute in some jurisdictions so-called "warning orders" have been substituted for service by publication,<sup>59</sup> and such an order is constructive notice of the pendency of the suit,<sup>60</sup> and may be regarded as the beginning of the action.<sup>61</sup> While the statutory provisions are subject to strict construction,<sup>62</sup> substantial compliance therewith is essential and sufficient to confer jurisdiction on the court.<sup>63</sup> While the code or statutory requirements may be sufficiently complied with by a properly verified petition containing the requisite statements,<sup>64</sup> the rule is otherwise as to a petition which is not verified,<sup>65</sup> or as to an affidavit which does not contain the requisite statements,<sup>66</sup> such as a statement relative to defendant's nonresidence,<sup>67</sup> his absence from the state,<sup>68</sup> or as to the country wherein he resides.<sup>69</sup>

If the affidavit is made by plaintiff's agent or attorney, there must be a showing as to affiant's connection with plaintiff and the absence of plaintiff from the county.<sup>70</sup> The court's order pursuant to which notice to appear is served on a nonresident is not a "writ" subject to statutory and constitutional requirements of seal and teste,<sup>71</sup> and the warning order is in the nature of a rule rather than a process.<sup>72</sup> Under some practice it has been held that where no personal judgment could have been rendered, and a nonresident defendant was summoned constructively in an action on contract, there was no occasion for a warning order.<sup>73</sup> The making of the affidavit a short time before its filing and the issuance of the order is not fatal.<sup>74</sup>

II. SERVICE OF PROCESS

A. IN GENERAL

§ 25. Nature, Necessity, and Modes of Service Generally

Service of process is the giving of such actual or constructive notice of a suit or other legal proceeding to the defendant as makes him a party and compels him to appear or suffer judgment by default; and what service shall be deemed sufficient is, subject to some limitations, to be determined by the legislative power of the sovereignty in which the proceeding is instituted.

Service of process is the giving of such actual or constructive notice of a suit or other legal proceeding to defendant as makes him a party thereto, and compels him to appear or suffer judgment by default;<sup>75</sup> and "service" in this connection means the execution of process<sup>76</sup> or the particular act of the officer by which the copy of the citation was communicated.<sup>77</sup> Service of process is a matter of adjective law, since it relates to, and deals with, the mechanics of practice and procedure, the legal machinery by which the substantive law is made effective.<sup>78</sup> The service of a summons is ministerial and not judicial in its nature.<sup>79</sup>

There are two general methods of service of process; one is actual, and the other constructive.<sup>80</sup> Actual service is made by reading the original process to defendant, or by delivering to him a copy thereof;<sup>81</sup> and constructive service, which is a substituted service, is made by leaving a copy of the process at defendant's residence when he is absent, or by posting or publishing notice of the pendency of the suit, and mailing a copy of the notice posted or published to defendant.<sup>82</sup> When not otherwise defined, "service" means personal service.<sup>83</sup>

While it has been said that the common-law rule with respect to service of process, established by centuries of precedent, is binding in the absence of statute,<sup>84</sup> subject to certain limitations, service of process is wholly a statutory matter;<sup>85</sup> and what service shall be deemed sufficient is to be determined by the legislative power of the state or sovereignty in which the proceeding is instituted, subject only to the limitation that the service must be such as may reasonably be expected to give the notice desired,<sup>86</sup> and any statutory service which

"Defective service" and "defective return" distinguished

A difference exists between "defective service of process" and a "defective return of service", in that the former is a fact while the latter is evidence thereof.—Tioga Coal Corporation v. Silman, 22 S.E.2d 873, 876, 125 W.Va. 58.

The word "served" as used in connection with a citation or process is a technical term and must be taken in its restricted and not its popular sense.—Philadelphia v. Cathcart, 10 Phila., Pa., 103—57 C.J. p 274 notes 15, 17, 18.

Constitutional requisites of statute

A state or territorial statute providing for service of process on non-residents must make ample provision for the giving of actual notice to defendants and for furnishing them with ample opportunity to appear in actions brought against them and offer whatever defenses they may have, and such statutes cannot discriminate against non-residents.—Anderson v. Scholes, D.C. Alaska, 83 F. Supp. 681.

Particular statutes held not unconstitutional

(1) Statutory provision that non-resident bringing suit in state must answer in action, brought by opposite party serving writ on attorney, as applied to counterclaims arising out of contract sued on by non-resident.—Frank L. Young Co. v. Mc-reasonably accomplishes that end answers the requirement of justice.<sup>87</sup> Legislative rules as to service of process in derogation of common law must be strictly construed.<sup>88</sup> The proper method of serving process must be adopted in order to render the service effective.<sup>89</sup>

(2) Statute providing that all process issued on institution of suit which may be begun in county where defendant does not reside may be served by the sheriff of county or the constable of the justice district in which the defendant is found.—Crum v. Baily, 184 So. 774, 135 Fla. 192.

(3) Statutes governing service of process by publication.—Ellsworth v. Ellsworth, 71 N.Y.S.2d 522, 189 Misc. 776.

(4) Statutes providing for extra-territorial service of process within the commonwealth.—Winters v. Rimersburg Coal Co., 61 A.2d 837, 360 Pa. 321—Heaney v. Borough of Mauch Chunk, 185 A. 732, 322 Pa. 487—Gossard v. Gossard, 178 A. 837, 319 Pa. 129.

(5) Statutes authorizing service on agent of nonresident doing business in commonwealth and requiring actual written notice to defendant before judgment, and statute requiring registration of fictitious business name as condition to doing business and requiring nonresident fictitious name certificate to state name of local agent.—Stoner v. Higginson, 175 A. 527, 316 Pa. 481.

Statutes construed and held to govern

N.Y.—La Monica v. Krauss, 76 N.Y. S.2d 520, 191 Misc. 589.

Purpose and effect generally

(1) The statutes providing manner in which summons shall be served are general in terms and all inclusive in scope and do not indicate an intent to exclude any particular class of cases.—Smith v. Smith, 39 S.E.2d 458, 225 N.C. 544.

(2) The legislature, when it enacted the civil practice act, had in mind the simplifying of service.—Gray v. Kroger Grocery & Baking Co., 13 N.E.2d 672, 294 Ill.App. 151.

(3) Statute relating to the service of process on nonresident defendants did not have effect of domesticating the parties to litigation in which service therein provided for was made on nonresident defendant by nonresident plaintiff.—Vassili's Adm'r v. Scarsella, 166 S.W.2d 64, 292 Ky. 153.

(4) Even though a statute may be a special venue statute creating a new right and a new remedy, if it fails to provide the manner in which process is to be served, the general service statutes apply.—State ex rel. Minihan v. Aronson, 165 S.W.2d 404, 350 Mo. 809.

Tenn.—Pinkerton v. Fox, 129 S.W.2d 514, 23 Tenn.App. 159.

Proceeding without personal service

(1) Only personal service of process was recognized at common law, and when other service is authorized by statute it is strictissimi juris.—Southern Mills v. Armstrong, 27 S. E.2d 281, 223 N.C. 495, 148 A.L.R. 1248.

(2) Thus, constructive service is in derogation of the common law, and a statute authorizing it is to be strictly construed.

Seizure of property

(1) In order to give jurisdiction, in absence of personal service on nonresident defendant, property of latter within territorial jurisdiction must be validly seized under court's process.

Ohio.—Francis v. Allen, Com.Pl., 79 N.E.2d 803.

(2) Court was held without jurisdiction, where returns on writ of attachment showed no property of nonresident defendant not personally served, and garnishee's answers to interrogatories disclosed no indebtedness to defendant.—Nelson v. Coppage, supra.

(3) Control and seizure of defendant's property by court as prerequisite to service by publication see infra § 59.

Operation of statute

(1) Constructive service statute is intended to cover causes arising or commenced subsequent to effective and it must be served by a proper officer or person.<sup>90</sup> As a general rule, constructive service is sufficient to give the court jurisdiction in an action in rem,<sup>91</sup> and insufficient where the object of the action is to determine personal rights and obligations of defendant.<sup>92</sup> Although a substantial<sup>93</sup> or reasonable<sup>94</sup> compliance with the directions of some statutes as to service seems to have been deemed sufficient, the general rule is that directions of a statute as to the service of process are mandatory<sup>95</sup> and must be strictly followed;<sup>96</sup> and it has been held that a stricter observance is required in constructive than in personal service.<sup>97</sup> The validity of the service does not depend on what is done with the summons after the service is made.<sup>98</sup> Where an action is brought against several named defendants, but only one is served, he alone has a status as defendant in the cause.<sup>99</sup> Service of process may be waived.<sup>1</sup> date of statute, and any cause instituted prior to such effective date must be continued under law which was in force at time cause was instituted.—Ake v. Chancey, 13 So.2d 6, 152 Fla. 677.

B. PERSONAL SERVICE

§ 26. In General

Personal service ordinarily means actual delivery of the process to the defendant in person, and in the absence of a statute authorizing a substitute method, service must be personal.

Personal service ordinarily means actual delivery of the process to defendant in person,<sup>2</sup> and does not include service by leaving a copy at his usual place of abode,<sup>3</sup> or his home,<sup>4</sup> or at his office,<sup>5</sup>

or by delivery to some one else for him,<sup>6</sup> although, as used in some statutes, the term "personally served" has been held to include such service<sup>7</sup> and to be used in contradistinction to service by publication<sup>8</sup> or by mail.<sup>9</sup>

Personal service is the ordinary method of obtaining jurisdiction over the person of defendant,<sup>10</sup> and, in the absence of a statute authorizing a substitute method,<sup>11</sup> service must be personal;<sup>12</sup> but personal service is not ordinarily necessary where the proceeding is in rem.<sup>13</sup>

Personal service of process may be waived,<sup>14</sup> but an admission by defendant that he received a copy of process improperly served will not amount to a waiver of proper service.<sup>15</sup>

Inconsistency with service by other methods. Circumstances may arise under which it will not be inconsistent where, in the same case, some of the parties obtain service of process on defendant by one method, and others by a different one.<sup>16</sup> So, where plaintiff sues more than one defendant he may obtain service against one by personal service within the state, and against the other by attachment by substituted service.<sup>17</sup>

§ 27. Authority or Capacity to Serve

The legislature may by statute fix the qualifications of the persons serving the summons by which suit is commenced; the requirements of such statutes must be observed, and service by one who had no authority to make it is a nullity.

It is competent for the legislature by statute to fix the qualifications for persons serving the summons by which suit is commenced;<sup>18</sup> the requirements of such statutes must be observed,<sup>19</sup> although the writ itself is not invalidated by unauthorized service.<sup>20</sup> Where the statute designates the particular officer or person to make the service, no other person can legally do so;<sup>21</sup> and service by one who had no authority to make it is a nullity.<sup>22</sup>

Presumption of competency. Ordinarily, one who makes service of a writ will be presumed to be a proper person in the absence of any showing to the contrary.<sup>23</sup>

- b. Disqualification of officer or deputy
- c. Inability to act

a. In General

In order that an officer may make legal service, he must have authority to do so. Where the statute designates a particular officer to make the service, no other officer can legally make it, although service by a de facto officer has been held valid; but, except as otherwise provided by statute, service may be made by an officer's deputy with the same effect as by the officer himself.

In order that an officer may make legal service, he must have authority to do so.<sup>24</sup> This authority in ordinary actions is the process of the court, issued by the clerk, and bearing teste in the name of the judge.<sup>25</sup> Where a statute designates a particular officer to make the service, he may act within the limits of his authority,<sup>26</sup> and no other officer can legally do so;<sup>27</sup> but an officer may make service as an individual under a statute providing for service by one not a party.<sup>28</sup> It was the rule at common law that an officer commencing to execute process should complete it.<sup>29</sup>

Some statutes either expressly or by construction

authorize the service of process by any officer to whom it might have been directed;<sup>30</sup> but it would seem that, where an officer can serve process only under particular circumstances, he has no power to serve process not directed to him.<sup>31</sup> An officer of one county cannot legally serve process directed to an officer of another county,<sup>32</sup> nor can he make service beyond the limits of his own county<sup>33</sup> unless expressly authorized to do so by statute.<sup>34</sup> No officer has authority to serve a void process.<sup>35</sup>

Service by a de facto officer has been held valid,<sup>36</sup> but service by an officer undertaking to extend his jurisdiction and serve process, which under the law he has no power to execute, is void.<sup>37</sup>

An attorney at law, although an officer of the court, is, in the absence of a provision in the statute making him such, not a statutory officer for the service of summons,<sup>38</sup> and stands in no better position in respect of authority to make such service than any other private citizen.<sup>39</sup>

Deputies. Except as otherwise provided by statute, service may be made by an officer's deputy with the same effect as by the officer himself.<sup>40</sup> A deputy may serve process already in his hands, although his principal has been removed.<sup>41</sup>

Process from another county. It has been held that a deputy may not serve process from another county which is addressed to his principal where he has no authority to serve process except such as he may have by virtue of being a deputy.<sup>42</sup>

Foreign process. Authority to serve foreign process is derived from the laws of the state issuing the process and not from the laws of the state in which it is served,<sup>43</sup> and, where such authority is given by the foreign law to an officer, it is personal to him and cannot be exercised by his deputy.<sup>44</sup>

An officer who is a party to, or is interested in, the litigation is generally disqualified from serving process therein, and when the officer is disqualified, his deputy is likewise ordinarily disqualified; but an interest which is remote and indirect, or merely nominal or formal, will not disqualify.

At early common law an officer might serve process at the commencement of the action where he was plaintiff,<sup>45</sup> but not where he was defendant;<sup>46</sup> but later it was held that he could not serve the process, even for the commencement of the action.<sup>47</sup> In many jurisdictions statutes, said to be but a legislative recognition of the common-law principle,<sup>48</sup> govern the service of process where the officer is a party to, or is interested in, the litigation.<sup>49</sup> A disqualification of an officer results in a similar disqualification of his deputy according to one view,<sup>50</sup> although where the statute in words extended only to the officer, a contrary view has been taken.<sup>51</sup>

An interest which is remote and indirect will not disqualify,<sup>52</sup> and, where his interest in the cause is merely nominal or formal and he has no personal interest in its subject matter, it has been held that the officer is not disqualified,<sup>53</sup> nor is his deputy,<sup>54</sup> and service by either on the substantial party defendant, although a codefendant of the officer, is valid;<sup>55</sup> and service on the officer by his deputy in such a case has been held valid,<sup>56</sup> since it is in effect an acknowledgment of service by the officer.<sup>57</sup> Where, however, the statute disqualifies an officer who is a party to the action, it has been held not necessary that he should have a pecuniary interest in the cause, if he is named a party therein; his disqualification exists if he is a party to the proceeding.<sup>58</sup> The granting of a motion to disqualify an officer from serving process because of his interest or prejudice is mandatory where there is a compliance with the statute authorizing such disqualification.<sup>59</sup>

Service by some other officer in cases of disqualification of the officer ordinarily charged with the duty of serving process is usually provided for by statutes whose requirements have been held to be mandatory,<sup>60</sup> and must, at least substantially, be complied with.<sup>61</sup>

Under some statutes, it has been held that an officer is incompetent to serve process in an action against a town of which he is an inhabitant and taxpayer;<sup>62</sup> but statutes expressly empowering the officer and deputy to make service in such cases remove the disability which would otherwise attach to them as codefendants.<sup>63</sup>

Where a deputy is a party, service may not be made on him by the officer or by another deputy,<sup>64</sup> although such service made in another official character may be valid,<sup>65</sup> and disqualification of an officer, not arising out of his official position, does not affect the authority of a deputy to make service as an individual.<sup>66</sup>

Record showing of disqualification may be necessary under some statutes.<sup>67</sup> Under a statute disqualifying an officer or his deputies when "parties to the writ," it has been held that interest alone will not disqualify<sup>68</sup> even where the officer was the person really interested in the litigation.<sup>69</sup>

c. Inability to Act

Where an officer is incapable of serving process by reason of sickness, absence, or the like, a deputy may act.

Instances may arise where an officer is incapable of serving process by reason of sickness, absence from the county, or like cause, in which case a deputy may act.<sup>70</sup>

§ 29. — Persons Specially Deputed or Appointed

a. In general

b. By court or clerk

a. In General

A person not otherwise authorized by statute to do so ordinarily cannot serve process unless he may be, and has been, specially deputed or appointed for that purpose; and where the matter has been the subject of legislative regulation, the power to appoint or deputize can be exercised only by the officer designated in the statute, and in the cases contemplated by the statute.

A person not otherwise authorized by statute to do so ordinarily cannot serve process unless he may be, and has been, specially deputized or appointed for that purpose;<sup>71</sup> but, where so specially deputized or authorized, one serving process has all the powers which may be exercised by the officer in executing such process,<sup>72</sup> except that he is not required to be recognized and obeyed as a known officer but must show his authority and make known his business<sup>73</sup> if required by the party to be served.<sup>74</sup> The authority to serve an original will not extend to the service of an alias.<sup>75</sup> The authority conferred may be limited in its exercise to a particular locality.<sup>76</sup>

Who may appoint. An officer authorized to serve process may appoint a special deputy to execute a particular process,<sup>77</sup> without any express authority derived from statute or otherwise.<sup>78</sup> Where the matter has been the subject of legislative regulation, the power to appoint or deputize can be exercised only by the officer designated in the statute,<sup>79</sup> and in the cases contemplated by the statute.<sup>80</sup>

Who may be appointed. While it has been held, under a statute giving the officer power to depute a person to do a particular act, that he could appoint plaintiff's attorney as special deputy to serve process in the cause,<sup>81</sup> the person appointed must possess the statutory qualifications.<sup>82</sup> The authority may be conferred on a minor,<sup>83</sup> although he cannot act as a general deputy.<sup>84</sup>

Requisites of appointment. The appointment at common law could be made in writing only,<sup>85</sup> and this would appear to be still the rule in some jurisdictions.<sup>86</sup> Statutes in many jurisdictions now regulate the deputizing of private persons to serve process, and, where so regulated, such appointment must comply with the statutes,<sup>87</sup> which in some jurisdictions are strictly construed.<sup>88</sup> Where a requirement as to dating is held directory and not mandatory, the omission of date will not vitiate the appointment.<sup>89</sup> Where the statute requires, either in direct terms or by the necessary implication of a prescribed form, that the person appointed be named in the writ,<sup>90</sup> a blank authority to a stranger is void.<sup>91</sup> Unless required by the statute, the person so appointed need not be appointed as a general deputy<sup>92</sup> or take the oath of a deputy sheriff.<sup>93</sup>

Indorsement, certificate, or record of appointment. The authority of the person specially deputized must be shown.<sup>94</sup> Under some statutes the authority of the person to serve the process must be indorsed on it,<sup>95</sup> and it has been held that the failure of one specially deputized to serve a writ to indorse on the copy served a copy of his authority, as indorsed on the original, vitiates the service;<sup>96</sup> but a requirement that the appointment shall be in writing indorsed on the writ has been held sufficiently complied with where written on a separate piece of paper and attached to the process.<sup>97</sup>

b. By Court or Clerk

A court has inherent power to appoint a special officer to execute its process, and such an appointment may be made under constitutional provisions or statutes providing for the appointment by the court or clerk.

A court has inherent power to appoint a special officer to execute its process,<sup>98</sup> and such an appointment may be made under constitutional provisions or statutes providing for the appointment, by the court or clerk, of private persons to make service of process in certain contingencies.<sup>99</sup> Such appointments are judicial acts,<sup>1</sup> and the authority to make them cannot be delegated,<sup>2</sup> nor can they be made in blank.<sup>3</sup> In some jurisdictions, the power to appoint under such a statute is held to be limited to cases actually pending in the court making the appointment.<sup>4</sup> It has been held that a minor may be appointed specially to serve process<sup>5</sup> although he would be ineligible for appointment to the position of the regular officer whose duty is to make such service,<sup>6</sup> but there are cases holding that an infant cannot be authorized to serve a writ by the magistrate signing it.<sup>7</sup> An appointment made without warrant of law is invalid.<sup>8</sup> Where a constitutional or statutory provision authorizes the appointment of a coroner for a special purpose when the office is vacant, a special coroner may be appointed by the clerk to serve process where the sheriff is a party and there is no coroner in the county.<sup>9</sup>

Indorsement, certificate, or record of appointment. Where the statute requires that the special authority of the person deputed or appointed shall be indorsed on the process, it should be made to appear that the person appointed is one eligible for the purpose.<sup>10</sup> Where the statute requires the reason for the appointment to be inserted in, or indorsed on, the process, the statement when so inserted is conclusive,<sup>11</sup> but the facts certified must be such as prescribed by the statute, and, where no such facts are certified, the certificate is wholly deficient and the appointment is of no effect.<sup>12</sup> Where not required by the terms of the statute, it would not seem necessary to insert the reason for the authorization,<sup>13</sup> or that the authorization appear in the record,<sup>14</sup> or that the appointee be sworn,<sup>15</sup> since it will be assumed, where the contrary does not appear, that authority was conferred on the process server.<sup>16</sup> Where an oath is required of the appointee, it is not necessary that the certificate of appointment contain the oath.<sup>17</sup> Unimportant verbal variations from a prescribed form of appointment will not affect the service,<sup>18</sup> but where the statute required indorsement "on the back of" the writ, an authorization written on a separate and distinct piece of paper has been held insufficient.<sup>19</sup>

§ 30. — Party or Private Person Not a Party

Service by a private person, and even by a party or his attorney is valid under some statutes, but generally, in the absence of statute, a person cannot serve process in his own action.

Service by a private person has been held valid under some statutes;<sup>20</sup> and under statutes which provide that process may be served by any person not a party to the action, service may be made by plaintiff's agent<sup>21</sup> or employee,<sup>22</sup> by a stockholder in a plaintiff corporation<sup>23</sup> or an officer or director thereof,<sup>24</sup> by an inhabitant of a town which is plaintiff,<sup>25</sup> or even by a disqualified officer in his private capacity;<sup>26</sup> but, unless permitted by the provisions of the statute, not by a minor.<sup>27</sup> A statute authorizing service by any person over twenty-one years of age who is competent to be a witness in the action, other than plaintiff, withholds authority to serve the summons only from a person who is plaintiff in the action,<sup>28</sup> and not from other persons who are interested in the outcome of the lawsuit.<sup>29</sup> Where the statute provides for service by the sheriff of the county where defendant may be found or by any other person not a party, service by a person not a party, beyond the limits of the county in which action was brought, would be valid.<sup>30</sup> It has been held that at common law service outside of the state may be made by a private individual.<sup>31</sup>

Service by party. It is a general principle of law that a person cannot serve process in his own action;<sup>32</sup> and this has been said to be the rule at common law with respect to service of summons,<sup>33</sup> but personal service of a summons may be made by plaintiff under a statute providing that civil process, except process requiring the arrest of any person or the seizure of property, may be served by any person of suitable age and discretion;<sup>34</sup> and it has also been said that the common-law rules as to the service of writs and other judicial process have no application to the service of

Statutes held not to apply

The statutes providing in substance that notice of a proceeding shall be in writing and that it may be served by any person who would be a competent witness do not apply to the notice or initial process to be given or served on a party to an original or independent proceeding, which notice or initial process brings party into court for the first time and first subjects the person to the jurisdiction of the court for the prosecution of the proceeding.—State ex rel. a summons, which may be served like any other notice by any private person unless prohibited by statute.<sup>35</sup> One who institutes inquisition proceedings against an insane person,<sup>36</sup> or who applies for letters of guardianship of his person,<sup>37</sup> or for the appointment of a guardian of the person and estate of one who is wasting his property<sup>38</sup> is a party to the proceeding and cannot make service. There is authority to the effect that service by plaintiff is a mere irregularity, rendering the service voidable,<sup>39</sup> of which advantage should be taken in the lower court,<sup>40</sup> and which is not voidable after judgment;<sup>41</sup> but a different view prevails in some jurisdictions and such service has been said to be void.<sup>42</sup>

Service by real party in interest. The word "party" as used in a statute providing that summons may be served by any person not a party to the action is not used in its technical sense,<sup>43</sup> and under such provision a real party in interest, although strictly not a party to the record, is not competent to serve a summons on defendant.<sup>44</sup> So it has been held that service is at least voidable when made by one who, although not named as a party, was in fact a real party in interest in the suit, and who might properly have been joined as a party plaintiff.<sup>45</sup>

Service by party's attorney has been held void in some jurisdictions under the rule that a person cannot serve process in his own action,<sup>46</sup> and such service is insufficient under statutes or rules of civil practice specifically forbidding service by an attorney for a party to the action;<sup>47</sup> but service may be made by plaintiff's attorney where the statutes provide that process may be served by any person not a party to the action<sup>48</sup> or by any person over a stated age who is competent to be a witness in the action, other than plaintiff.<sup>49</sup> Where, however, the statute provides that the return of process should be to the clerk "or attorney who issued same," it has been held that, in view of the language of the statute, an attorney of record may not serve summons.<sup>50</sup>

§ 31. Persons to Be Served

Generally, all persons interested in the subject matter of the controversy should be served, but under some statutes service on an agent or attorney may be sufficient.

As a general rule, all persons interested in the subject matter of the controversy should be served,<sup>51</sup> but an exception to the rule is that where the parties are numerous and it is impracticable to bring them all before the court, service on some of them to act for the others as well as for themselves may be held a sufficient service on the whole,<sup>52</sup> and this exception is particularly applicable in actions against unincorporated societies, as discussed in Associations § 36 c. Moreover, service on a named defendant may under the circumstances of the case, not be necessary in order to protect plaintiff's rights.<sup>53</sup> Where individuals are

In stockholder's suit to set aside transfer of assets by corporation allegedly converted to use of bank, allegation that such bank had transferred assets to another bank precluded necessity of serving transferring bank with process, although it was named defendant.—Seattle Nat. Co. v. Gilmore, supra.

Statutory action for recovery of land with mesne profits may proceed against defendant in actual possession, who was served, although a residents of a state, they are at all times subject to service of process.<sup>54</sup>

As considered supra § 26, actual delivery of the process to defendant in person ordinarily is necessary in order to constitute personal service.

Service on an agent or attorney is not sufficient,<sup>55</sup> except where the statute provides for service on a corporation or individual by actually making service on an officer or agent, such service then being personal service on such corporation or individual,<sup>56</sup> or except where the person to be served expressly authorizes an agent to receive process for him.<sup>57</sup> Under some statutes, which, since they are remedial, should be liberally construed,<sup>58</sup> process served on an attorney or agent of a party is sufficient,<sup>59</sup> as where the statute provides that, if an action is brought by a nonresident, the writ in a cross action brought against him by defendant in the former action may be served on the attorney of record for plaintiff in the original action.<sup>60</sup> In all actions or proceedings where a party has an attorney of record, the service of papers, when required, must be made on the attorney,<sup>61</sup> and service on him is sufficient,<sup>62</sup> except in a case where the statute expressly provides otherwise;<sup>63</sup> but this rule applies only after defendant has been properly served and brought into court and employed an attorney to represent him,<sup>64</sup> and the fact that the attorney may have represented the party in other matters does not authorize service in a matter in which he does not appear as attorney.<sup>65</sup> Defendant who appears through counsel specially to bond property attached and to remove the cause to the federal court, being before the court for no other purpose, may not thereafter be brought into court through service on his special counsel.<sup>66</sup> Service on an authorized agent imposes on the one served the duty of acquainting his principal with the commencement of the proceeding in order to avoid default, and to enable defendant to prepare his defense;<sup>67</sup> accordingly, service on an adversely interested agent of defendant is not a valid service as to defendant.<sup>68</sup>

Character of agent

Agent on whom service may be made under nonresident service acts need not be described as attorney in fact, special agent, or agent on whom process may be served; nor need his authority be expressed, since it is sufficient if he has name or character of agent, in appropriate territory, of defendants against whom writ has been directed.—*Stoner v. extent of receiving service of process depends on the continuance of his employment.<sup>69</sup> A power of attorney which grants to an attorney in fact the power to institute, prosecute, defend, and dispose of actions, suits, or other proceedings, or otherwise to engage in litigation in connection with the premises, does not authorize service on the attorney in fact of process required as the basis of a suit against the grantor of the power.<sup>70</sup> An official who instigates a suit, and whose duty it is to collect the money claimed therein, cannot at the same time be the real plaintiff and defendant's representative, agent, or attorney in fact, on whom process may be served.<sup>71</sup> The designation by statute of a particular officer or officers on whom service of process may be made excludes all others.<sup>72</sup> Under some statutes, where defendant has not sufficient mental capacity to understand the meaning of papers left with him or to take steps to defend or settle the action, plaintiff should apply to the court for an order designating some person on whom summons shall be served.<sup>73</sup>

a. In General

Subject to such exceptions as may have been made by valid statutory provisions, the general rule is that process cannot be lawfully served outside the territorial limits of the jurisdiction of the court from which it issues.

The place where process may be served must be that permitted by the common law except as changed by statute;<sup>74</sup> and subject to such exceptions as may have been made by valid statutory provisions,<sup>75</sup> the general rule is that process cannot be lawfully served outside the territorial limits of the jurisdiction of the court from which it issues,<sup>76</sup> and this is true regardless of the residence

(1) Statute dealing with service on nonresidents covers that class of cases where a suit in equity is instituted, concerning goods, chattels, lands, tenements or hereditaments, or for the perpetuating of testimony concerning any lands, tenements, etc., situate or within the jurisdiction of the court, or concerning any charge, lien, judgment, mortgage or encumbrance thereon, and that class of cases where the court acquired jurisdiction of the subject matter in controversy, by the service of its process on one or more of the principal defendants.—Mid-City Bank & Trust Co. v. Myers, 23 A.2d 420, 343 Pa. 465.

(2) Extraterritorial service of process under the provisions of the statute may properly be made on a mortgagee in a proceeding in equity by the owner of real estate subject to the mortgage, to ascertain the amount of the lien in order to tender payment thereof and require the lien to be satisfied of record so as to clear the property of encumbrances, since such a suit directly concerns a mortgage on land within the statutory language.—Stumpf v. Cervino, 44 Pa. Dist. & Co. 511.

(3) The statute does not authorize service of bill outside of jurisdiction of court, where all property affected is not within its jurisdiction and personal decree is sought.—Vandersloot v. Pennsylvania Water & Power Co., 102 A. 422, 259 Pa. 99.

(4) Although the phrase "subject matter" is often used as a synonym for the word "property" in in rem actions, it is used in a broader and more general sense in the statute providing that where court has acquired jurisdiction of the subject matter in controversy, by the service of its process on one or more of the principal defendants, it has the power to order that any process be served on any defendants therein, then residing or being out of the jurisdiction of such court, wherever they may be found.—Mid-City Bank & Trust Co. v. Myers, supra.

(5) The statutory provision means that where the court has acquired jurisdiction of the particular controversy by service of its process on a principal defendant, it then has power to serve its process on other defendants who can be found within the state, jurisdiction of the subject matter being determined by the general powers of the court conferred by the sovereign authority. The legislature in enacting the statute had in mind what has been called

"venue jurisdiction" which means the judicial power of the particular court to determine the cause.—Mid-City Bank & Trust Co. v. Myers, supra.

(6) The statute manifests, when construed as a whole, that the legislature intended to provide for extraterritorial service in actions both in personam and in rem, and to make a different provision as to service in actions of a different nature.—Mid-City Bank & Trust Co. v. Myers, supra.

(7) Under the statute, there need not be, in every case, a finding of a joint undertaking in the sense in which that phrase is ordinarily used, but parties against whom plaintiff has an entirely separate cause of action cannot be brought in by extraterritorial service merely because plaintiff deems it more convenient.—Mid-City Bank & Trust Co. v. Myers, supra.

or citizenship of the party thus served,<sup>77</sup> although the rule does not apply where defendant has agreed in advance to accept or does in fact accept some other form of service as sufficient.<sup>78</sup> There must be actual service within the proper territorial limits on defendant or some one authorized to accept service for him.<sup>79</sup> The fact that defendant has had actual notice of the proceedings cannot supply validity to an attempted service under an unconstitutional statute providing for such service.<sup>80</sup> Statutes governing service of process in another district are construed strictly in favor of defendants,<sup>81</sup> and their provisions must be complied with in every essential requirement.<sup>82</sup>

b. In Another County

At common law or in the absence of statute, service of process cannot be had on a defendant outside the county where it is issued, but in some cases, by virtue of statutory provisions, process may be served in a county within the state other than the one in which the action or proceeding is instituted.

Principal establishment or habitual residence

(1) Under provisions of statute one should be cited in parish in which he has his principal establishment or habitual residence, but one having several residences and occupying one about as much as the other and who has made no declaration of domicile, may be cited at either place.—Mosely v. Dabazies, 76 So. 705, 142 La. 256.

Service held sufficient

(1) One suing for assault and battery had right to cite and serve defendant at his place of business in parish of venue, wherein cause of action arose, even though petition alleged that defendant resided in another parish.—Bacas v. Laswell, La.App., 22 So.2d 591.

(2) In suit against a public power and irrigation district and certain state executive and administrative officers charged with the administration of the public waters of the state, service of summons on the officers in the counties of their residence was proper.—Loup River Public Power Dist. v. (3) Where defendant in trespass to try title was served in county named as that of his residence in supplemental petition filed after citation and before service, but not in county named in original petition, service was held valid, in view of presumption that citation served was issued on application of plaintiff, which application might have been oral or written.—Jones v. W.Va.—Hall v. Ocean Accident & Guarantee Corporation, 9 S.E.2d 45, 122 W.Va. 188.

The reason for statutes and rules allowing extracounty or other extraterritorial service when the action is brought in the jurisdiction where the cause of action arose is that such jurisdiction is the best place for trial, because of the availability of witnesses, presence there of physical facts relevant to the issue, and other matters of similar nature.—Koll v. Pickford, 44 A.2d 276, 353 Pa. 118—Hartman v. Donahue, 16 A.2d 691, 142 Pa.Super. 382.

the process may and does run to another county,<sup>86</sup> or throughout the state.<sup>87</sup>

Under statutes allowing process to be issued to another county where defendant resides or where he has his usual place of abode, the word "reside" has been held to include the place where defendant for the time being might be, whether or not his permanent place of residence;<sup>88</sup> and it has been held that one may have more than one residence in the state and each be "a usual place of abode" for service of process,<sup>89</sup> or he may have a "usual place of abode" outside the state and may have one within the state at the same time and each may be sufficient for service.<sup>90</sup>

Where by statute plaintiff may elect to sue in the county where the cause of action arose or in the county where defendant resides, it has been held that, if plaintiff sues where the cause of action arose, defendant must be served with process in that county.<sup>91</sup>

Under a statute permitting the action to be brought in any county in which defendant or one of several defendants resides or is summoned, service may be made in any county in which defendant is found,<sup>92</sup> but if the action is not brought in the county in which defendant resides, the service must be had in the county in which the action is brought,<sup>93</sup> although if the action is brought in the county of defendant's residence, summons may be served on defendant in another county.<sup>94</sup>

Where venue is fixed by the location of real estate to be affected or where the cause of action arose, defendant may be summoned and validly served with process in a county other than that of the venue of the action even in the absence of specific statutory authority,<sup>95</sup> and process may be served in any county in the state;<sup>96</sup> it is not essential that process be served on anyone in the county where suit is pending.<sup>97</sup>

A statute, by its terms providing that process may be issued to an adjoining county in a proceeding for foreclosure of a mortgage, will not authorize such issue in a proceeding to foreclose a common-law lien.<sup>98</sup>

In case of several defendants. Where a statute provides that an action may be brought in any county where any of the defendants may reside, process can be served on the other defendants in any other county either before or after service on resident defendant.<sup>99</sup> Under a statute authorizing an action to be brought in the county in which defendant or one of several defendants resides or is summoned, service of process on all defendants may be made in counties other than that in which the action is brought if at its commencement any of them resided in the county where the action is brought,<sup>1</sup> but a nonresident defendant can be served in the county of his residence only by making someone a party defendant who is jointly liable and over whom the court issuing the summons has jurisdiction.<sup>2</sup> Statutes which permit service in another county in an action against several defendants jointly liable have been construed to require service on<sup>3</sup> or general appearance of<sup>4</sup> at least one real or material<sup>5</sup> defendant in the county of venue, since it is held that such statutes apply to a non-resident found within the state,<sup>6</sup> and, where service is had on defendant temporarily in the county, will authorize service on his codefendants outside the county.<sup>7</sup> The joint liability should appear on the face of the pleadings.<sup>8</sup> In some jurisdictions, such statutes are construed as requiring proof of service on a defendant in the county of venue to be filed as a condition precedent to valid service in another county on a codefendant,<sup>9</sup> and where so construed it has been held that, where proof of service on a defendant in the county of venue and on a defendant out of the county are filed on the same day, without any showing of which took place first, service on defendant out of the county is unauthorized.<sup>10</sup> A defendant may, under some circumstances, interplead another party and have process issued to and served in the county in which such interpleaded party resides.<sup>11</sup> Service had on defendant in the county of venue must be a sufficient legal service,<sup>12</sup> hence, it has been held that service outside the county of venue is not legal where defendant served therein was exempt from service.<sup>13</sup>

c. On Nonresident within Jurisdiction

A nonresident found within the territorial jurisdiction of the court may usually be served with the same effect as though he were a resident.

If a nonresident is found within the territorial jurisdiction of the court, personal service may usually be made on him with the same effect as though he were a resident,<sup>14</sup> and the service is not rendered inoperative by the fact that suit was filed and process issued prior to his coming within the jurisdiction.<sup>15</sup> In cases where the statute provides for service on a nonresident by publication alone, however, personal service on him within the state will be without effect.<sup>16</sup> The mere transaction of business in a state by a nonresident natural person does not imply consent to be bound by the process of its courts;<sup>17</sup> and an attempted service on a nonresident through a local agent after the agency is at an end is of no effect.<sup>18</sup>

d. In Another State or Country

Except as and for the purposes authorized by statute, personal service without a state is ineffectual for any purpose.

Process from a court of one state cannot flow into another state and compel a person who is there domiciled to subject himself to a proceeding to establish his personal liability in the court from which the process issued.<sup>19</sup> Thus, except as and

(1) The ultimate test in determining validity of service of counterpart summons on nonresident defendant is plaintiff's good faith in joining resident defendant who has real and antagonistic interest in subject matter of suit.—Taylor v. McCool, 189 S.W.2d 817, 183 Tenn. 1.

Alias

Fact that alias summons was not issued within specified number of days after issuance of a first summons as required by statute in order to constitute commencement of a suit was held not to render service of process invalid, where service was made before limitations had run against cause of action, although after termination of the specified period.—Hubbard v. George F. Alger Co., 1 N.E.2d 325, 51 Ohio App. 405.

ute it is sufficient,<sup>28</sup> although not served immediately at or near the time of commencement of the action.<sup>29</sup> A provision requiring issuance of summons within a year from the time of filing of the complaint does not require service within a year.<sup>30</sup> Plaintiff's lack of diligence in serving the summons is not excused by the pendency of other proceedings.<sup>31</sup> In statutory proceedings where notice is not required by the statute, but must be given on general principles before the rights of a party can be taken away, the time when the notice should be given is immaterial, as long as the opposite party has it before the court acts.<sup>32</sup>

Before action begun. Service before the suit is legally commenced is a nullity.<sup>33</sup> Where the statute expressly provides that a suit shall be commenced by filing a petition in the clerk's office and causing a summons to be issued thereon, issuance and service of summons before the filing of a petition are invalid and of no effect,<sup>34</sup> and where not required, if the complaint when filed, after the service, states facts sufficient, the court has jurisdiction of both the person and of the subject matter.<sup>35</sup>

On day of issuance. Process returnable within a given number of days from its date may be served on the day of its issuance.<sup>36</sup>

On return day. Generally, the last day on which process may be executed is the return day thereof;<sup>37</sup> and service is in time if made any time on that day;<sup>38</sup> but, where the statute provides for service "any time before the return day," a service made on that day is void in some jurisdictions<sup>39</sup> and voidable in others.<sup>40</sup>

After day or term to which returnable. After the return day, the writ being functus officio,<sup>41</sup> service of it is ineffective according to some decisions,<sup>42</sup> although the view has been taken that a service of summons on the day after it should have been returned does not render the service void, but only voidable.<sup>43</sup> So, where service is returnable to a term of court, its service after the appearance term, without an order extending it, has been held to be a nullity,<sup>44</sup> as has been service not made within an extension of time ordered by the court.<sup>45</sup>

Who may or must serve

Statute providing that action shall be considered as begun when summons is served on defendant or delivered to proper officer for such service, but that such delivery shall be ineffectual as against defendant not served within limitation period, unless summons be actually served on him within specified number of days thereafter, does not require such officer to serve summons within specified number of days after delivery thereof to him, but service by another officer within the statutory time is sufficient.—Berghuis v. Under a statute providing that if it shall not be in the power of the officer to serve a summons a stated time before the return day thereof he may execute it at any time before or on the return day, but if not served the statutory time before the return day defendant shall be entitled to a continuance, it is the officer's duty, when he receives the summons, to serve it, irrespective of whether or not the statutory time would intervene thereafter between the date of service and the first day of the return to which it was returnable.—Taylor v. ### b. Extension of Time

Unless prohibited by statute, the courts have discretionary power on good cause to extend the time for making personal service of process.<sup>47</sup> The application for extension should show a reasonable effort to make service.<sup>48</sup> The request for extension must be unconditional<sup>49</sup> and cannot be made to depend on the ruling of the court on objections to the original service.<sup>50</sup> Where a statute provides time for service at a certain distance, and additional time for every additional fifty miles, but there is not an additional fifty miles but a lesser additional distance, a part of a day cannot be added to the time, and the original time must suffice.<sup>51</sup>

Ex parte order for extension of time may be set aside where made without a showing of due diligence in effort to make service.<sup>52</sup>

By attorney or sheriff. In accordance with the practice in some jurisdictions, the return day of the writ may be reasonably extended by alteration by the attorney or sheriff<sup>53</sup> even after the original day has passed.<sup>54</sup>

a. In General

In order to constitute a good personal service, the defendant must, in some substantial form, be apprised of the fact that service is intended to be made; and, where service of process is regulated by statutes or court rules, the specified method is exclusive and must be followed.

In order to constitute a good personal service, defendant must, in some substantial form, be apprised of the fact that service is intended to be made,<sup>55</sup> which, depending on the statute, rule of court, or practice controlling the matter in the particular jurisdiction, may be done by reading the process to him,<sup>56</sup> explaining its nature,<sup>57</sup> or delivering to him a copy of the process;<sup>58</sup> but the act of effecting service on a defendant must be per-

Perfection of service after term

(1) Where there is neither service nor entry nor waiver of service at appearance term, plaintiff must then and there move for order to perfect service, or he will be chargeable with laches.—Nail v. Popwell, 122 S.E. 632, 32 Ga.App. 20.

(2) Where defendant is temporarily absent from jurisdiction, rendering service impossible, failure to move for order to perfect service is not laches.—Nail v. Popwell, supra.

(3) If there is no service of the petition and process, and plaintiff is guilty of laches, the writ becomes abortive, and the court loses jurisdiction to amend process and to have service perfected.—Nail v. Popwell, supra.—McClendon v. Ward-Truitt Co., 91 S.E. 1000, 19 Ga.App. 495.

(4) Where plaintiff actively endeavors to remedy nonservice of petition and process, and to have service made on first opportunity after his exercise of due diligence discovers that service was not perfected, court's jurisdiction continues to have service perfected after first term.—McClendon v. Ward-Truitt Co., supra.—Beach Lumber Co. v. Baxley Banking Co., 68 S.E. 946, 8 Ga.App. 251.

(5) So, where petition was filed and process regularly issued and annexed thereto, on discovery that defendant had not been served, judge properly ordered that next term be made return, term and defendant be served with copy of petition, and service on defendant of copy of petition and new process attached thereto was sufficient.—Duren v. Pollock, 169 S.E. 44, 46 Ga.App. 706.

(6) Where plaintiff, after affidavit of illegality had been sustained, petitioned for an order to perfect service, alleging the exercise of all diligence in having the service perfected, an order to amend process and perfect service was properly allowed.—McClendon v. Ward-Truitt Co., supra.

formed both knowingly and intentionally.<sup>59</sup> Under some statutes the original writ need not be produced and shown to defendant at the time of service.<sup>60</sup> It has been said, as discussed supra § 25, that the common-law rule with respect to service of process is binding in the absence of statute; and it has also been said that in the absence of legislative provision the mode of effecting service rests with the court.<sup>61</sup> Where, as is practically the case in all jurisdictions now, however, service of process is regulated by statute or court rules, the specified method is exclusive<sup>62</sup> and must be followed,<sup>63</sup> and such service must appear of record.<sup>64</sup> If the statutes permit one of two or more methods, the method adopted must be followed strictly.<sup>65</sup> Any attempted service which fails to be effective as service on the party who is sought to be bound is defective service whether it be so fatally defective as to be void, or only so defective as to be voidable.<sup>66</sup> Where what the law requires is done, the doing of additional superfluous acts will not vitiate the service.<sup>67</sup> The fact that defendant was ill when served does not invalidate the service.<sup>68</sup> In order to serve a fictitious defendant it is not indispensable for the process server to tell the person served he is being served as a fictitious defendant where he knows, or, as a reasonable man, should know, that he is being so served.<sup>69</sup> The party at whose instance a writ has issued, or his attorney, has the right to give the officer directions as to how it shall be executed, which directions, when not in conflict with the law, the officer is bound to follow.<sup>70</sup>

What law governs. The method of serving process is governed by the law of the forum,<sup>71</sup> and the law in force at the time of service, and not that in force at the time of issuance, controls.<sup>72</sup>

b. In Case of Several Defendants

Where there are several defendants, the service must be complete and entire as to each; but defective service as to one defendant cannot be availed of by his co-defendant.

Where there are several defendants, the service, in order to operate as personal service on all of them, must be complete and entire as to each;<sup>74</sup> and each defendant should be served in the manner prescribed.<sup>75</sup> Where service is defective as to one defendant, it is a matter personal to him and cannot be availed of by his codefendant;<sup>76</sup> nor does it affect the validity of the service on his codefendant.<sup>77</sup>

c. Where Service Refused

Where facts occur which would convince a reasonable man that personal service of process is being attempted, service cannot be avoided by denying service and moving away without consenting to take the document in hand; and service may be effected by depositing the paper in some appropriate place in his presence where it will be most likely to come into his possession.

When men are within easy speaking distance of each other and facts occur which would convince a reasonable man that personal service of process is being attempted, service cannot be avoided by denying service and moving away without consenting to take the document in hand.<sup>78</sup> The general rule is that, where a defendant on whom service of process by copy is sought to be made refuses to receive the copy offered, the person or officer making the service should inform him of the nature of the paper and of his purpose to make service thereof, and deposit it in some appropriate place in his presence or where it will be most likely to come into his possession.<sup>79</sup> Every case, however, must depend in a great measure on its own circumstances.<sup>80</sup>

d. Use of Force

An officer has no right to use force in serving civil process, and has no authority to make a forcible entry into a dwelling house for the purpose, but may enter through an open door or window; and, having lawfully entered upon premises, may use such force as is necessary to overcome resistance he may meet with in the service.

While an officer has no right to use force in serving civil process,<sup>81</sup> and has no authority to make a forcible entry into a dwelling house for the purpose of serving process,<sup>82</sup> even after request for, and refusal of, admittance,<sup>83</sup> he may enter for that purpose through an open door<sup>84</sup> or window;<sup>85</sup> and, where he has entered peaceably upon premises and is lawfully there, he may use such force as is necessary to overcome any resistance he may meet with in the service of the process.<sup>86</sup> Forcing defendant to enter the state for the purpose of serving process on him renders service under such circumstances void.<sup>87</sup>

(1) Where process server, who had previously served petitioner, approached petitioner with process in hand similar to that previously served, and stated while twelve feet away that he had another one of

to the defendant, and, where the statute requires reading, the writ must actually be read to the defendant personally.

Where a different method is not required by statute, service should be made by reading the original process to defendant,<sup>88</sup> and, where the statute requires reading, the writ must actually be read to defendant personally,<sup>89</sup> and a copy need not be left with him<sup>90</sup> unless, as discussed infra § 36, the statute requires it in addition to the reading. If, however, defendant refuses to hear it read, the offer to read it is sufficient to constitute a good service.<sup>91</sup> Even though the officer is not expressly required by the statute to read the writ to defendant, it is proper for him to read it or explain its nature.<sup>92</sup>

Reading over a telephone is not a reading personally so as to constitute valid service within the purview of the statute,<sup>93</sup> even though the officer recognizes defendant's voice.<sup>94</sup>

§ 36. — Delivery of Copy of Process

- a. In general
- b. Requisites of copy

a. In General

Where a statute or rule of court provides for service by delivery of a copy of the process, the copy should be delivered to, and left with, the defendant personally by one authorized to serve it.

Where the statute or court rules provide for service by delivery of a copy of the process, the copy should, except as otherwise provided by statute, be delivered to, and left with defendant personally,<sup>95</sup> by hand,<sup>96</sup> and according to some authority this is customary even though the statute law does not prescribe exactly the manner in which the writ should be served.<sup>97</sup> Under such statutes or rules it is not necessary to read the process to defendant<sup>98</sup> or to explain it to him;<sup>99</sup> and it is not sufficient merely to read it to him<sup>1</sup> or to offer to deliver it.<sup>2</sup> Mere casual delivery of the process to defendant by a person without authority is not sufficient.<sup>3</sup> Under a statute providing merely that a writ of summons shall be issued for defendant, it is not necessary to leave a copy of the writ with him.<sup>4</sup>

By mail. Personal service cannot be made by mail.<sup>5</sup>

b. Requisites of Copy

The copy delivered should conform to the original and must contain the vital things of which the defendant is to be given notice; but service is not void because of a variance between the original writ and the copy served if the defendant is not misled thereby.

The copy delivered should, as a matter of course, conform exactly to the original,<sup>6</sup> and must contain the vital things of which defendant is to be given notice;<sup>7</sup> but a copy is not an original,<sup>8</sup> and defendant is not entitled to a duplicate original,<sup>9</sup> although if by mistake the original instead of a copy be delivered to, or left for, defendant this will not affect the service.<sup>10</sup> Service is not void because of a variance between the original writ and the copy served if defendant is not misled thereby,<sup>11</sup> but is voidable only.<sup>12</sup> If a single defendant is sued in more than one capacity, he need not be served with more than one copy of the writ.<sup>13</sup>

Clerical errors in the copy delivered will not affect the validity of the service where defendant has not been misled.<sup>14</sup> Thus, the following have been held, at most, mere irregularities: Designating the wrong month for the term when the mistake is an obvious one;<sup>15</sup> giving a wrong day of the month as the return day, when the return day is fixed by law;<sup>16</sup> the omission of words of surplusage;<sup>17</sup> giving the wrong year when the date given is obviously an impossible one;<sup>18</sup> the lack of the file number of the case;<sup>19</sup> the want of the signature of the officer who issued it;<sup>20</sup> the omission of the date of the summons;<sup>21</sup> the failure to indorse thereon the date and place of service;<sup>22</sup> and error in stating defendant's initials.<sup>23</sup>

Omission of plaintiff's name. Where the copy of the summons does not sufficiently advise defendant of the name of the person or persons by whom he has been sued, the service is fatally defective,<sup>24</sup>

but there is authority for the proposition that the copy will be sufficient if the name is indorsed upon the back thereof.<sup>25</sup>

Seal need not be copied on the copy of the process served.<sup>26</sup>

Copy of stamp. Although the original summons or process may be required by statute to be stamped, it is not necessary that the copy served indicate that the original bears a stamp.<sup>27</sup>

Authentication. The copy need not be certified where not required,<sup>28</sup> but where the statute requires that the copy not only be true, but be attested or certified, a service otherwise sufficient is defective where the copy served is not attested<sup>29</sup> or certified<sup>30</sup> as required.

The requirement of a statute or rule of court that a copy of the declaration or complaint shall be served with the summons is mandatory, and service of one without the other is not sufficient.

statute or rule of court that a copy of the declaration or complaint shall be served with the summons is usually considered as mandatory.<sup>32</sup> Both must be delivered in order to constitute valid service,<sup>33</sup> and it is not sufficient to serve the copy of the pleading without the writ<sup>34</sup> or the writ without the copy of the pleading.<sup>35</sup>

In case of several defendants. Where a statute requires service of summons on several defendants by delivering to the one first served a copy of the petition and writ, and to those subsequently served a copy of the writ, those subsequently served need not be served with a copy of the petition;<sup>36</sup> nor, where there are defendants in more than one county, does such a statute require a copy of the petition to be delivered to the first defendant served in each county.<sup>37</sup> Such a requirement is personal to the defendant first served,<sup>38</sup> and does not require service of copy on any of the subsequent defendants, where the defendant first served appears;<sup>39</sup> and, accordingly, one attacking the validity of a service on the ground that he was not served with a copy of the petition must show that he was the defendant first served.<sup>40</sup>

Time of service. Under a statute permitting the filing of a complaint after service of summons, a copy of the pleading need not be served contemporaneously with the summons,<sup>41</sup> but if served therewith will not render the service bad,<sup>42</sup> even though the copy attached is wanting in requisite jurisdictional allegations.<sup>43</sup>

(2) Where a copy of a complaint was served on the agent of a railroad company, together with notice of hearing, even though neither the notice nor the complaint were addressed to receivers of the railroad by name, such service was sufficient notice to them to give the commission jurisdiction to require construction of a depot.—Lusk v. State, 150 P. 151, 47 Okl. 648.

of differences between the original pleading and the copy served unless the defendant's substantial rights are affected.

It has been held that service will not be set aside because of differences between the original pleading and the copy served unless the substantial rights of defendant are affected.<sup>44</sup> While the statute may not require the petition or the process to be in more than one language, a valid service may require delivery by the sheriff of a copy of the papers in two languages.<sup>45</sup>

Certification. Unless required by the statute, the copy of the pleading need not be certified;<sup>46</sup> but, where required, service of an uncertified copy<sup>47</sup> or of a copy merely certified to state the nature of the demand<sup>48</sup> will be insufficient. Where the statute requires a certified copy of the petition to be delivered with process served outside the county where the suit is pending, it is unnecessary to serve such a copy on a defendant who is a resident of the county in which the suit is brought;<sup>49</sup> hence a certified copy of the petition need not accompany a citation when the petition alleges that defendant is to be found in the county where the suit is brought and he is found there.<sup>50</sup>

After amendment of the original pleading, service of a copy of it is not sufficient.<sup>51</sup>

a. In General

An acknowledgment or acceptance of service within the jurisdiction is the full equivalent of actual personal service, and renders such service unnecessary, but it does not constitute an appearance or waive any right of defense, nor does it waive the issuance of process or the right to object that it was not timely served. The authorities are not in accord as to the effect of the mere acceptance of a writ beyond the jurisdiction of the court.

An acknowledgment or acceptance of service within the jurisdiction is the full equivalent of actual personal service,<sup>52</sup> especially where such acceptance of service is fortified by actual participation in the suit to its conclusion,<sup>53</sup> and renders such service unnecessary,<sup>54</sup> and statutes providing for acknowledgment of service are declaratory of the common law.<sup>55</sup> An acknowledgment of "due service" includes an acknowledgment both of a proper manner and a proper time of service.<sup>56</sup> An acknowledgment of service does not constitute an appearance<sup>57</sup> or waive any right of defense,<sup>58</sup> nor does it waive the issuance of process<sup>59</sup> or the right to object that it was not served the requisite time before the appearance term;<sup>60</sup> the fair meaning of an acceptance of service minuted upon the citation is that the signers thereof admit the service with the same effect it would have if made on each of them by an officer, and nothing more.<sup>61</sup> It serves the same purpose as the return made on a summons served by the sheriff in supplying proof of service.<sup>62</sup>

Outside jurisdiction of court. The authorities are not in accord as to the effect of mere acceptance of service of a writ beyond the jurisdiction of the court,<sup>63</sup> but the weight of authority appears to support the view that such acceptance is not equivalent to an appearance<sup>64</sup> and has no effect other than that of personal service outside the jurisdiction,<sup>65</sup> although it has been held, in some cases, equivalent to personal service within the state.<sup>66</sup> An acknowledgment of such service may be so worded, however, as to constitute a waiver and be legally sufficient to confer jurisdiction,<sup>67</sup> and it has been held that an acceptance of service out of the state which includes an extension of time to answer the complaint will give personal jurisdiction.<sup>68</sup>

b. By Agent or Attorney in Fact

An acknowledgment of service of process by an agent expressly authorized to make such acknowledgment is sufficient, but the authority of an agent to make the acknowledgment must be specially conferred and must be shown; and acceptance by one acting without authority is insufficient, although an unauthorized acceptance may be ratified.

predicated on acts or declarations of the agent.<sup>71</sup> There is no presumption that a person who is not an attorney at law has authority to acknowledge service of process on another person;<sup>72</sup> and an agent has no implied authority to accept such service.<sup>73</sup> Acceptance by one acting without authority in that respect is insufficient;<sup>74</sup> but an unauthorized acceptance of service may be ratified by a defendant in whose behalf it is made.<sup>75</sup>

c. Form and Requisites

The acknowledgment should be in writing and signed, and may be upon a separate piece of paper, but need not necessarily show the time or place of service.

The acknowledgment should be in writing and signed,<sup>76</sup> and may be made upon a separate piece of paper,<sup>77</sup> but not necessarily on the day on which service is acknowledged.<sup>78</sup>

Statement of time and place. It has been held unnecessary, where not required by statute, for the acknowledgment to show the time<sup>79</sup> or place<sup>80</sup> of service, and in any event such failure to do so will not be fatal on collateral attack;<sup>81</sup> and, although required by code, such omissions in an acknowledgment of service have been held to be mere irregularities<sup>82</sup> which may be supplied<sup>83</sup> or waived by appearance.<sup>84</sup>

d. Time

Unless otherwise provided by statute, acknowledgment or acceptance of service may be made before the filing of the declaration, complaint, or petition, but an acknowledgment made after the appearance term or judgment is a nullity.

Unless otherwise provided by statute, the effect of which may be to nullify an acknowledgment previously made,<sup>85</sup> acknowledgment or acceptance of service may be made before the filing of the declaration, complaint, or petition.<sup>86</sup> An acknowledgment made after the appearance term is a nullity,<sup>87</sup> as is an acknowledgment after judgment.<sup>88</sup>

e. Proof

An acknowledgment of service indorsed on the writ and subscribed by the defendant, supported by proof of the genuineness of the defendant's signature, is sufficient to show service.

An acknowledgment of service indorsed on the writ and subscribed by defendant is usually held to show service,<sup>89</sup> but it must usually be supported by proof of the genuineness of the signature of defendant.<sup>90</sup> Such proof, in some jurisdictions, may be made by the officer who makes service so stating in his return.<sup>91</sup> Where not required by the statute to be proved, in at least one jurisdiction the signature will be presumed genuine in the absence of proof to the contrary.<sup>92</sup> Proof of the fact of acceptance of service made to the court is as satisfactory as a return by the sheriff of the fact on the writ,<sup>93</sup> and the finding of the

§ 39. Service Procured by Fraud or Pretense of Settlement

Personal service is void if obtained by inveigling or enticing the person to be served into the territorial jurisdiction of the court by means of fraud and deceit, or by trick or device; but service will not be held invalid where defendant comes voluntarily into the jurisdiction, even though he is induced by misinformation to permit the process server to obtain an opportunity to serve which he would not otherwise have given him.

Personal service is void if obtained by inveigling or enticing the person to be served into the territorial jurisdiction of the court by means of fraud and deceit,<sup>96</sup> actual or legal,<sup>97</sup> or by trick or device,<sup>98</sup> and in such case defendant is not required to appear or defend.<sup>99</sup> So service is void if obtained by securing defendant's presence within the jurisdiction by means of criminal process,<sup>1</sup> or by pretense of settlement,<sup>2</sup> whether the matter of a settlement was first broached by plaintiff or defendant;<sup>3</sup> but it has been held that the rule is otherwise if there is a bona fide purpose to discuss the matters in controversy in an attempt to

Validity dependent on fraud or bad faith

(1) Validity of service of process on resident of another jurisdiction obtained while he was in jurisdiction in which served solely for purpose of appearing in court to answer criminal charge depends on whether defendant's presence in jurisdiction was procured by fraud and misrepresentation.

reach a settlement.<sup>4</sup> The rule applies where the parties reside in separate counties in the same state and venue rests on such residence, as well as where the parties reside in separate states.<sup>5</sup> Action of a plaintiff in creating a debt due from defendant's resident agent to defendant, who is a nonresident, for the purpose of attaching it, is not a fraudulent scheme or device for obtaining jurisdiction over defendant.<sup>6</sup>

The fact that defendant is constantly passing back and forth into the jurisdiction will not excuse service at a time when his presence there was induced by fraud,<sup>7</sup> although effectual service might have been made during any other visit;<sup>8</sup> nor will the fact that service by publication will place defendant in the same position validate a service obtained by fraud.<sup>9</sup>

The rule applies where the fraud is that of plaintiff's agent<sup>10</sup> or attorney,<sup>11</sup> and although plaintiff had no actual knowledge of the fraud practiced on defendant;<sup>12</sup> but where defendant is induced to come into the jurisdiction by a third person not in privity with, or acting in behalf of, plaintiff, service is not invalid.<sup>13</sup>

Service will not be held invalid where defendant

voluntarily comes into the jurisdiction,<sup>14</sup> as to attend to a business in which he and plaintiff are interested and out of which the cause of action arises,<sup>15</sup> or to attend to his own private affairs<sup>16</sup> or business matters,<sup>17</sup> or where he comes at the request of his own attorneys to attempt to effect a settlement of another action,<sup>18</sup> even though it may be inconvenient for him to make his defense in such jurisdiction<sup>19</sup> and even though plaintiff anticipated his coming and intended to obtain service on him.<sup>20</sup> Where one is within the potential reach of service of process he has no grievance if he is induced by misinformation to permit the process server to obtain an opportunity to serve which he would not otherwise have given him.<sup>21</sup> Where, however, a defendant comes within the jurisdiction voluntarily under an agreement providing for a specific course of procedure, and submits himself to service, if plaintiff afterward disregards the agreement the service will be held void.<sup>22</sup>

Coincidence of parties and subject matter in criminal and civil actions

Fact that there was coincidence of parties and subject matter in both criminal and civil actions, and that a period of only twelve days elapsed from filing of the civil suit and arrest of defendant under criminal warrant raised presumption that plaintiff fraudulently pursued criminal remedy primarily to enable courts to obtain jurisdiction over defendant in civil suit.—Crusco v.

smacking of such improprieties will properly be scrutinized with jealous caution in order to prevent successful perpetration;<sup>26</sup> but honesty of intent on the part of plaintiff will be presumed in the absence of facts and circumstances justifying an inference to the contrary.<sup>27</sup>

§ 40. Operation and Effect in General

Where a defendant has properly been served with process it becomes his duty to determine whether his right is to be invaded by the litigation, and if so, to appear and plead; and, as between defendants, one properly served is in for every purpose connected with the action; but where an officer serves a void process, the service is void.

Since, as stated in Courts § 83 b (1), where a defendant has properly been served with process, the court has jurisdiction of his person, and since, as shown in Actions § 129, the action is commenced, it then becomes defendant's duty to determine from the record in the cause whether his right is to be invaded by the litigation, and, if so, to appear in the action and plead therein.<sup>28</sup> As between defendants, a defendant properly served is in for every purpose connected with the action, and this applies to all matters brought in question by the petition;<sup>29</sup> and where summonses are issued against all joint obligors of a written guaranty and service is made on all but two, one of whom is deceased and the other whose whereabouts are unascertainable, plaintiff may proceed against defendants served.<sup>30</sup> Where an officer serves a void process the defect cannot be regarded as a mere irregularity, and the service is void.<sup>31</sup> Process for the seizure of property operates when and where it is executed.<sup>32</sup>

§ 41. Double Service

A second service of process does not waive the first service, and a valid and complete first service is not affected by a second service except in so far as the first service may entitle the plaintiff only to a judgment in rem and the second service may entitle him to a personal judgment.

A second service of process does not waive the first service,<sup>33</sup> and where the first one is valid, and accomplishes all the purposes for which it issued, it is not affected by a second service,<sup>34</sup> which may be disregarded in the absence of any showing that defendant was misled thereby.<sup>35</sup> A second service will not effect a shortening of time allowed a defendant to do an act under the law applying to the first service.<sup>36</sup> The rule that a valid first service is unaffected by a second one is not applicable, however, where the effect of the first service was to entitle plaintiff only to a judgment in rem;<sup>37</sup> and in such case plaintiff may thereafter make personal service on defendant so as to obtain a personal judgment against him.<sup>38</sup>

§ 42. Amended and Alias Process

After service of process, a formal amendment does not require service of the amended process, but the amended process must be served where the original is defective and has been set aside or adjudged invalid, or when new parties are added to the writ. The original summons need not be served with an alias.

After service of process, a formal amendment does not require service of the amended process,<sup>39</sup> and it has been held that, after a general appearance by a defendant, the court may allow the writ to be amended by increasing the ad damnum without further service of process;<sup>40</sup> but the amended process must be served where the original process is defective, and has been set aside or adjudged invalid,<sup>41</sup> and the court may properly so order.<sup>42</sup> An amendment of the writ by adding new parties requires service on them.<sup>43</sup> Where the original process has been returned and filed, the court, in the exercise of its inherent power over its own process, and as the justice and exigencies of the case may demand, may, on amending, order it withdrawn from the files and served<sup>44</sup> or may order an entirely new summons issued and served.<sup>45</sup> In those jurisdictions where the summons is not a writ of court but is issued by plaintiff or his attorney, it would seem that service of an amended summons on defendant would be proper, although he was not served with the one first issued.<sup>46</sup>

Where an original summons becomes functus officio because of failure to serve within the time after its issuance prescribed by statute, if plaintiff desires the action continued he must cause alias summons to be issued and served;<sup>47</sup> but it has been held under some statutes that the issuance of an alias summons does not extend the time within which service of summons must be had after commencement of the action.<sup>48</sup> The original summons need not be served with an alias,<sup>49</sup> since the alias is a writ complete in itself.<sup>50</sup>

C. SUBSTITUTED SERVICE

§ 43. In General

In its technical sense, "substituted service" is service by leaving a copy of the process at the residence or abode or place of business of the defendant. This method of service is purely statutory, and the provisions of the statute must be observed in order to make the service effective.

Since "substituted service" by its very designation indicates a form of service which may be used as a substitute for personal service, it is obviously, in some respects at least, different and distinct from the latter.<sup>51</sup> Nevertheless, for some purposes substituted service is deemed equivalent to personal service<sup>52</sup> as distinguished, for example, from service by publication,<sup>53</sup> which is discussed infra §§ 54-72. "Substituted service" as used in its narrow technical sense is distinguishable from "constructive service,"<sup>54</sup> which is a broader term sometimes used to designate service by publication;<sup>55</sup> but "substituted service" itself is frequently used in a broad sense as the equivalent of "constructive service,"<sup>56</sup> and has even been said to be equivalent to "service by publication"<sup>57</sup> or has been used as in-

In suit against nonresident

Where trial court has jurisdiction over justiciable subject matter which is under control of defendant nonresidents and statutes authorize substituted or constructive service of process in suit, which process as issued and served affords due process of law to the defendants, the court may proceed in the cause and the property duly involved and, within jurisdiction of the court is subject to appropriate decrees in the cause pending final adjudication.—Gribbel v. In its narrow technical sense substituted service is service by leaving a copy of the process at the residence or abode or place of business of defendant;<sup>60</sup> and it is in this sense that the term is used in the ensuing discussion.

It is within the power of the legislature to provide for substituted service in cases of necessity or if personal service is for any reason impracticable.<sup>61</sup> This method of service is purely statutory<sup>62</sup> and in derogation of the common law;<sup>63</sup> it is a method extraordinary in character,<sup>64</sup> and hence may be used only as prescribed and in the circumstances authorized by statute.<sup>65</sup> In order for such service to be effective plaintiff must bring himself and his cause of action clearly within provisions authorizing it;<sup>66</sup> and the statutory requirements must be followed<sup>67</sup> and, under the controlling

Purpose of provisions

(1) The purpose of the provisions for substituted service is to give the courts jurisdiction of the person of a defendant on whom personal service within the state cannot be effected.—Rawstorne v. Maguire, 192 N.E. 294, 265 N.Y. 204.

(2) The purpose of the statute requiring that nonresident defendants be actually notified of the action was to prevent judgments being rendered against nonresidents without their being actually apprised of the action and given reasonable opportunity to defend such actions.—Eastman v. Benton, 167 So. 169, 184 La. 620.

(3) The purpose of substituted service of process is to bring knowledge of pending litigation to defendant in order that he may appear and guard his interest. Fla.—Clark v. Clark, 30 So.2d 170, 158 Fla. 731.

Sufficiency of notice afforded

The sufficiency of a statutory substitute for personal service depends on whether it is reasonably calculated to provide defendant with notice of the action, and an opportunity to be heard.—Kurilla v. Roth, 38 A.2d 862, 132 N.J.Law 213.

True copy

In action to try title to office of superior court clerk, service by leaving copy of summons at defendant's last residence is fatally defective, where copy does not purport to be signed by clerk or where copy is not essentially a true copy.—McLeod v. Pearson, 181 S.E. 753, 208 N.C. 539.

decisions, must be followed strictly,<sup>68</sup> faithfully,<sup>69</sup> fully,<sup>70</sup> literally,<sup>71</sup> or at least substantially.<sup>72</sup> Any substitute service other than that authorized by the statute is ineffective.<sup>73</sup>

Service is complete when all the required acts are done.<sup>74</sup> So, if all that the statute requires is done, it is immaterial that defendant in fact receives no actual notice thereof;<sup>75</sup> and the fact that he does not thereafter personally receive the papers which were so served<sup>76</sup> or that he receives them at a late date<sup>77</sup> ordinarily does not affect the validity of the service. Conversely, if the statute is not complied with it is of no avail that defendant does in fact receive actual notice of the action<sup>78</sup> unless the statute provides that such actual notice renders the service sufficient.<sup>79</sup> Nevertheless, it has been said that service under such a statute should be of such a character as to make it reasonably probable that defendant will receive actual notice;<sup>80</sup> and, where the circumstances are such that it is apparent that defendant cannot be notified of the service by the person with whom the process is left, the service is insufficient.<sup>81</sup>

Where alternative methods are provided for, plaintiff may not arbitrarily select any one of the alternatives regardless of the facts or regardless of his knowledge that the selected method will prove ineffectual to give defendant notice whereas one of the other permitted alternatives would give notice.<sup>82</sup> Where a general statute governing process in a particular court provides for service either personally or by leaving it at defendant's residence, a statute governing process in a particular form of action in such court and providing merely for service on defendant will not be construed as excluding residential service.<sup>83</sup> A statute providing for two days' notice before appearance in cases of personal service has been held to apply to substituted service.<sup>84</sup> When a particular mode of procedure is provided in cases where a defendant is absent from the jurisdiction at the time of commencing the action, leaving a copy of the process

Service held invalid

Where service of summons in civil action was attempted pursuant to statute providing that a copy thereof may be left at house of defendant's usual abode with a person of suitable age and discretion then residing therein, but defendant's seventeen-year old daughter refused to open door and plaintiff gained admission thereto by summoning and accompanying two police officers who had been asked to investigate a complaint of alleged juvenile delinquency by such daughter, and police officer without intending to serve summons or knowing the nature of the paper, handed it to daughter, attempted service was invalid, since service of process must be made knowingly and intentionally.—*Lee v. at his residence is not good personal service.<sup>85</sup> If, under statutory authority, a private person undertakes to serve the process he is, like the sheriff, agent for plaintiff for that purpose only.<sup>86</sup>

Rules of statutory construction. As a general rule statutes or court rules authorizing substituted service must be strictly construed,<sup>87</sup> although it has been said that a statute providing for such service should be liberally construed.<sup>88</sup> The construction and application of the statutes or court rules must comport with the fundamentals of due process,<sup>89</sup> and they should be construed sensibly and applied only in a reasonable way<sup>90</sup> and in a manner consistent with their purpose.<sup>91</sup> Provisions should not be read into such statutes which are not expressly stated therein or necessarily implied.<sup>92</sup> Under the rule that a statute will be construed to uphold its validity wherever possible, discussed in Constitutional Law § 98, a statute providing for service on an agent of a nonresident will be construed to mean a nonresident of the county but a resident of the state, where to construe it to mean a nonresident of the state would render it unconstitutional.<sup>93</sup>

§ 44. When Authorized

Substituted service is effective only if the statutory requirements as to inability to find or serve the defendant personally are met.

Depending on the terms of the statute, it has been held that substituted service is to be used only when defendant cannot be found personally,<sup>94</sup> where defendant seeks to evade personal service,<sup>95</sup> or where defendant cannot be served personally although he is not guilty of self-concealment.<sup>96</sup>

Knowledge of, or effort to ascertain, defendant's location. Under some statutes, in order to justify such service, all efforts to locate defendant must have been made,<sup>97</sup> and the service is invalid if his location could in fact have been readily discovered.<sup>98</sup> Under other statutes, however, knowledge of defendant's whereabouts does not prevent substituted service where defendant cannot with the exercise of due diligence be served within the state.<sup>99</sup> Clearly, where it appears that plaintiff has made diligent efforts to serve defendant, and cannot learn of his whereabouts, the order for substituted service is proper.<sup>1</sup>

Defendant in armed forces

Where a defendant's present location was unknown because he was somewhere with armed forces, the alleged fact that plaintiff's proposed cause of action against defendant was for personal injuries, and that defendant was insured against liability so that action would probably be defended by an insurer, would not authorize substituted service of summons.—Robinson v. Five One Five Associates Corporation, 45 N.Y. S.2d 20, 180 Misc. 906.

Existence of cause of action. Under some statutes substituted service may not be made on a non-resident defendant unless a cause of action appears to exist against him.<sup>2</sup>

On one personally before court. Under a statute to such effect, when a party is personally before the court either because he instituted the proceeding or because he had personal service of the original process of the forum, all action taken thereafter in that proceeding or supplementary thereto may be begun by substituted service.<sup>3</sup>

In action against foreign corporation to obtain a new trial of action in which corporation at a previous term of court had obtained a judgment against plaintiff, summons issued and executed pursuant to statute providing for service of summons on a nonresident was not subject to motion to quash on ground that plaintiff sought to obtain a judgment in personam against nonresident corporation.—*South v. ### Personal representative

Process may be executed on personal representative by substituted service.—Haller v. Digman, 167 S.E. 593, 113 W.Va. 240.

Where transaction of business in state by nonresident natural persons does not imply consent to be bound by process of its courts.—Hensley v. Green, D.C.S.C., 36 F.Supp. 671.

Place of residence or domicile

The place of residence, not domicile, controls as to right to make substituted service under statute.—Hetson v. Sommers, 44 N.Y.S.2d 31, affirmed 48 N.Y.S.2d 35.

Persons held resident

(1) Evidence that resident, having departed from this country for purpose of establishing his domicile in Switzerland, stopped en route in France, at which time substituted service was obtained on him in New York under statute, was insufficient to show effective change of domicile, which requires intent to change accompanied by an actual going to and abiding in new place, and the service was valid.—Alvord & Alvord v. Pate-notre, 92 N.Y.S.2d 514, 196 Misc. 524.

(2) Substituted service was not rendered invalid because plaintiff knew that defendant was in Trinidad engaged in constructing United States naval base, where defendant's absence was only temporary and he returned to his residence in New York at completion of his work, since he was still a resident of New York; and the fact that defendant received mail addressed to him at Trinidad did not change the rule.—Hetson v. Sommers, 44 N.Y.S.2d 31, affirmed 48 N.Y.S.2d 35.

Persons held nonresident

(1) Defendant, who lived in another state, was not a resident of the state of the forum so as to be subject to substituted service of process, notwithstanding he made frequent visits to the state of the forum under arrangement with hotel whereby he kept same room for baggage but was charged only for time actually in hotel, and notwithstanding he left permanently for purpose of evading process.—Rawstorne v. Maguire, 192 N.E. 294, 265 N.Y. 204.

(2) Defendant who had maintained home within the state was not resident of the state so as to be subject to substituted service of process where there was no bodily presence in the state at time order for substituted service was made, there was no permanent place of abode and no domicile within the state, and defendant and her husband and children maintained home in another state.—McCandless v. Reuter, 288 N.Y.S. 952, 248 App.Div. 93.

(3) Under statute providing for substituted service against a resident defendant is proper.<sup>4</sup> Such service, in its technical sense, as distinguished from service by publication, cannot be employed against nonresidents<sup>5</sup> or outside the territorial limits of the state,<sup>6</sup> at least in actions based on ordinary money demands<sup>7</sup> or to determine purely personal rights and obligations,<sup>8</sup> except where and to the extent that a resident agent of a nonresident may by statute be subject to such service under the rules discussed infra § 50. Substituted service is not available against one who is at the time immune from any civil process.<sup>9</sup>

§ 46. Service on Several Defendants

Where several defendants are to be served by substituted service of summons on a "person residing within the state" on whom plaintiff is unable to make personal service of summons within the state, quoted phrase includes bodily presence in the state; hence substituted service on a member of the armed forces who, while retaining his domicile in the state, has his actual residence changed to place where he is stationed, is not proper since he would not be a "person residing within the state" within meaning of the statute.—Lerman v. Copperman, 52 N.Y.S.2d 50, 183 Misc. 352.

Soldier in actual service

(1) Under a statute providing that no civil process shall issue or be enforced against any person in actual service of the armed forces of the United States, service of process may not be made on such a soldier by serving an adult member of his family at his dwelling.—Fister v. Bollinger, supra.

(2) Even apart from such statute, but on grounds of public policy, a person in actual military service overseas is not subject to process served by handing a copy thereof to an adult member of defendant's family at his residence, and the court has power to quash service so made.—Fister v. Bollinger, supra.

Substituted service, in order to be complete as to each one of several defendants, must be had by leaving a copy for each at the place designated by the statute.<sup>10</sup>

§ 47. Place Where Copy Left

Under statutes providing for substituted service, a copy of the process is generally required to be left at the defendant's domicile, residence, or place of abode, as these terms are construed by the courts.

The statutes generally require that the copy shall be left at defendant's domicile, residence, or place of abode;<sup>11</sup> and the courts have given a great deal of consideration to determining the sense in which such statutes employ the terms "residence,"<sup>12</sup> "dwelling house,"<sup>13</sup> "place of abode,"<sup>14</sup> "usual place of abode,"<sup>15</sup> and the sense in which such statutes

Defendants in same family

(1) Where two defendants were members of the same family, service of one copy of summons on third member of family for both defendants did not comply with statute, and such service was insufficient to confer jurisdiction on court out of which summons issued; and a default judgment rendered on such service against one of the defendants was void on the face of the record.—Chaney v. Reddin, 205 P.2d 310, 201 Okl. 264, 8 A.L.R.2d 337.

(2) Service of execution on mother without leaving copy for daughter living with mother and employed during day was not service on daughter.—Barnes v. Freed, 173 N.E. 795, 342 Ill. 73.

"County of residence"

Under statute providing that, if defendant is not found within the county of his residence, an original notice shall be served by leaving a copy thereof at his usual place of residence, etc., the term "county of his residence" means the county of defendant's legal residence or domicile; the statute contemplates a county from which defendant may be physically absent.—Ruth & Clark v. Emery, 11 N.W.2d 397, 233 Iowa 1234.

Actual rather than constructive residence

Word "residence" within statute permitting writ of summons, or complaint, if action is commenced by complaint, to be served on individual defendant by handing a copy at residence of defendant to an adult member of family with which he resides, means actual residence and does not mean constructive residence or domicile.—Robinson v. Robinson, 67 A.2d 273, 362 Pa. 554.

Compared with "residence"

(1) "Usual place of abode" is synonymous with "residence."—Husband v. Crockett, 115 S.W.2d 882, 885, 195 Ark. 1031.

(2) "Usual place of abode" is a much more restricted term than "residence."

Compared with "domicile"

(1) "Usual place of abode" has been held distinguishable from "domicile."

N.J.—Eckman v. Grear, 187 A. 556, 558, 14 N.J.Misc. 807.

Utah.—Booth v. Crockett, 173 P.2d 647, 648, 110 Utah 366—Grant v. Lawrence, 108 P. 931, 933, 37 Utah 450, Ann.Cas.1912C 280.

(2) It has also, however, been held synonymous with it.—McFarlane v. Cornelius, 73 P. 325, 328, 43 Or. 513.

Synonymous with "dwelling house"—Or.—McFarlane v. Cornelius, supra.

"Usual place of abode"

(1) The place where a person has his fixed permanent home; the place to which he intends to return.—McGill v. Miller, 37 S.W.2d 689, 690, 183 Ark. 585.

(2) The house in which one's wife and children are living, although he may be absent at time of service of process and such absence may have continued over considerable period of time.—Husband v. Crockett, 115 S.W.2d 882, 885, 195 Ark. 1031—Shepard v. Hopson, 86 S.W.2d 30, 32, 191 Ark. 284.

(3) The customary or settled place of residence; a regular, fixed, and permanent residence as distinguished from a temporary stopping or abiding place.—Caskey v. Peterson, 263 N.W. 658, 660, 220 Wis. 690.

(4) The place where defendant is employ the term "domicile,"<sup>16</sup> and like terms.<sup>17</sup>

If defendant has not changed his domicile or residence he may be served there, even though he himself is and has been absent.<sup>18</sup>

It is insufficient, however, under such a statute, to leave the copy at defendant's place of business<sup>19</sup> unless, where the statute so provides, defendant's residence cannot be found and the court orders service at defendant's place of business;<sup>20</sup> nor is it sufficient to leave the copy at the dwelling house of another person,<sup>21</sup> or at a house or hotel where he is temporarily stopping<sup>22</sup> unless defendant's place of abode is there,<sup>23</sup> or in defendant's berth in a steamer on which he has taken passage,<sup>24</sup> or in a part of the house which he does not inhabit or frequent<sup>25</sup> or which he occupies only as a business office,<sup>26</sup> or a part in which defendant has no interest other than the privilege of occasional use,<sup>27</sup> or at any other place not constituting defendant's residence or domicile or abode within the meaning of the statute.<sup>28</sup> actually living at the time of service.

Test

Fact that many personal possessions of defendant remained at parents' home in which defendant had lived prior to departure for naval service, that ties of blood and affection continued, and that defendant frequently corresponded with persons at the home, were to be considered in determining where defendant's usual place of abode was within meaning of statute.—Booth v. Crockett, 173 P.2d 647, 110 Utah 366.

Temporary absence or break in continuity

Fact that a person departs from his usual place of abode temporarily does not necessarily show that he has ceased living at usual place of abode within meaning of statute providing for substituted service of summons; but, if the break in the continuity of his activities which constitute living at what was his home is so marked, such as an indefinite tenure of military or any duty away from that home, the place where he lived would be not his present usual place of abode but a former place of abode.—Booth v. Crockett, supra.

"Last home" is not synonymous with "usual place of abode."—Washburn v. Angle Hardware Co., 132 S. E. 310, 144 Va. 508.

Several residences

Under the construction of the phrase "usual place of abode" as meaning the place where defendant is actually living at time of service, where persons have several residences which they permanently maintain, occupying one at one period of year and another at another period, a summons must be served at the dwelling house in which defendant is living at time when service is made.
